[c] (Ala. 1860) The administrator was allowed for money paid a grown-up son for services in managing his father's plantation during the latter's life, upon proof of their value, and that they were rendered with the father's knowledge and approval, though no special contract was ever made about them. It appeared that the son "found" himself and his horse.—Kinnebrew's Distributees v. Kinnebrew's Adm'rs, 35 Ala. 628.

[cc] (Fla. 1884) While the presumption is that services rendered by an adult daughter to her father in his home are not to be paid for, such presumption may be overcome by the facts and circumstances of the case.—Mills v. Joiner, 20 Fla. 479.

[d] (Ga.) To entitle a son to recover against the estate of his deceased father for care bestowed upon the latter while old and infirm, it must affirmatively appear either that the services were rendered under an express contract that the son was to be paid for them, or the surrounding circumstances must plainly indicate that it was the intention of both parties that compensation should be made, and negative the idea that the services were performed merely out of filial love.—(1892) Hudson v. Hudson, 90 Ga. 581, 16 S. E. 349; (1893) O'Kelly v. Faulkner, 92 Ga. 521, 17 S. E. 847.

[dd] (Ill. 1855) If a child remains with a parent after arriving at majority, in the same apparent relation as when a minor, the presumption is that wages are not to be paid for services rendered. This may be rebutted by proof of an express or implied contract, which latter may be shown by circumstances establishing that the parties intended a pecuniary recompense.—Miller v. Miller, 16 Ill. (6 Peck) 296.

[e] (Ill. 1872) Where a son erected a house on his father's premises in his lifetime, in a suit by the son to recover of his father's estate, his right depended on whether he expected pay at the time he placed the house on the premises and the father expected to pay.—Byers v. Thompson, 66 Ill. 421.

[ee] (Ill. 1872) The mere fact that a child, after attaining her majority, continued to reside with her parents, raises no obligation to pay for services thereafter rendered as a member of a family, and such services cannot be presumed to constitute a consideration for a note given long after.—Arnold v. Franklin, 3 Ill. App. (3 Bradw.) 141.

[f] (Ill. 1886) Where a child lives with the parents, or a parent with a child, the law does not imply a contract to pay money for support or services, and, unless it is shown that there was an express contract to pay for such services and support, a recovery cannot be had by one of the parties against the other.—Falcon v. McIntyre, 118 Ill. 292, 8 N. E. 815.

[ff] (Ill. 1891) Where a child remains with one standing in loco parentis, after having reached the age of majority, in the same apparent relation as when a minor, the presumption is that the parties do not contemplate payment of wages for services rendered; but, where there was an agreement to pay the child a certain amount on her marriage, a recovery may be had therefor.—Stock v. Stolts, 137 Ill. 349, 27 N. E. 604.

[g] (Ill. 1892) Where a daughter of age, who is earning her own living, returns home at her father's request, and assists in the work of the home, there is an implied contract to compensate her for her services.—Robnett v. Robnett, 43 Ill. App. 191.

[gg] (Ind. 1848) No compensation is due to a son for services rendered to his father after the attainment of majority, while remaining in his father's house and rendering only such services as he had previously been accustomed to render, unless there be an agreement to pay for them.—Resor v. Johnson, Ind. (1 Cart.) 100.

[h] (Ind. 1854) Where a father and adult children live together as members of a common family, there is no implied obligation to pay for service rendered on the one hand, or for board furnished on the other; but such obligation may arise from contract, and the contract may be inferred from circumstances.—House v. House, 6 Ind. 60.

[hh] (Ind. 1863) Where a daughter, after her majority, continues to live with her father, as she had done previously, and was provided with necessaries as one of the family, she was not entitled to recover for her services, unless there was an express agreement, before the services were rendered, that she should receive compensation.—Pitts' Adm'r v. Pitts, 21 Ind. 309.

[i] (Ind. 1864) Where a child continues with the parent after becoming of age, a contract to pay a reasonable compensation for its services may be inferred from circumstances tending to rebut the ordinary presumption that no wages are to be paid.—Adams v. Adams' Adm'r, 23 Ind. 50.

[ii] (Ind. 1865) A widow to whom a farm has been devised by her husband cannot, in the absence of any contract, express or implied, recover rent of the farm, or board, from a son who was a minor at the death of his father, and who took the management of and worked upon the farm; the whole family of the widow living together and upon the common earnings.—Hays v. Seward, 24 Ind. 352.

[j] (Ind. 1874) From the mere fact that a child continues to reside with his parents as a member of the family after he arrives at age, or that parents reside in the family of the child, there is no implied understanding on the part of either to pay for services rendered, or for board, lodging, or clothing furnished; but an undertaking to pay may either arise from an express contract or may be inferred from circumstances. An express contract to pay is not always necessary. The relationship merely rebuts the presumption, which would otherwise arise, that compensation was intended, and circumstances of such a nature and character as to overcome the presumption which arises from the relationship of the parties may justify the inference that compensation was intended.—Smith v. Denman, 48 Ind. 65.

[jj] (Ind. 1880) Though no contract for payment for services is implied by the fact that a son, after becoming of age, with his wife, resides with his father as members of the family, such contract may be shown by circumstances.—Hilbish v. Hilbish, 71 Ind. 27.

[k] (Ind. 1891) In an action by an adult daughter against her father to recover for domestic services rendered while living as a member of his family, although a contract to pay for such services is essential to her recovery, an express contract need not be shown, but it may be inferred from the surrounding circumstances.—Story v. Story, 1 Ind. App. 284, 27 N. E. 573.

[kk] (Iowa, 1879) A son went to live with his aged parents, managed their farm, and took care of them for 16 years. He was not industrious or prosperous, and the farm yielded only a living for the family. The father did but little work, but the mother was quite active and useful much of the time. Held that, in the absence of any evidence of a contract, it will be presumed that the son's services were gratuitous.—Wilson v. Wilson, 52 Iowa, 44, 2 N. W. 615.

[l] (Iowa, 1889) Plaintiff, while unmarried, lived at home with her father, mother, and brothers, and worked with them in market gardening. With their joint earnings a farm was purchased, the deed being made out in the name of one of the brothers. Afterwards plaintiff married, and moved away, and the farm remained under the control of the grantee for 18 years, without any assertion on the part of the plaintiff that she had any interest in it. Held that, there being no express contract for the payment of plaintiff's services, a finding that there was no agreement to pay for such services was justified.—Spitzmiller v. Fisher, 77 Iowa, 289, 42 N. W. 197.

[ll] (Ky. 1865) In an action for services rendered by a son to his mother, evidence that the mother often declared her purpose to give him all she had, and that he inquired of her, only a few months before her death, what she intended to do for him, is sufficient to repel the presumption that he was to be paid for his services.—Perry v. Perry, 63 Ky. (2 Duv.) 312.

[m] (Ky. 1880) Where there was no expectation by either party that the son was to be paid for services rendered for his father when he had become too old and disabled to attend to business, no suit will lie against the estate.—Conover v. Conover's Adm'r, 1 Ky. Law Rep. 398.

[mm] (Md. 1894) Where a father, who has need of help on his farm, induces a son, after he has attained majority, to work thereon, and the son remained for years, rendering continuous and valuable services, a promise to pay the reasonable value thereof may be implied.—Hardy v. Hardy, 79 Md. 9, 28 Atl. 887.

[n] (Mich. 1886) In dealings between a father and son, members of the same household, furnishing board, clothes, money, and the like, there is no implied promise of payment, and an express promise must be shown or there can be no recovery.—Allen v. Allen, 60 Mich. 635, 27 N. W. 702.

[nn] (Mo. 1889) A daughter who nurses and cares for her mother during her last illness, in order to recover for such services, in the absence of an express promise, must establish an implied promise by showing an intention on her mother's part to pay, and on her own to receive payment, even though the mother left her own home and went to that of her daughter for the purpose of procuring such attention from her.—Brock v. Cox, 38 Mo. App. 40.

[o] (Mo. 1892) No presumption arises that a father promised to pay his son for assisting him with enemas after he had become old, sick, and constipated, said son being the only male member of his family living near him, though the services were rendered at the father's request, and on his objection to being served by any one else.—Penter v. Roberts, 51 Mo. App. 222.

[oo] (Mo. 1893) A son cannot recover for taking care of his infirm and demented father unless he shows a state of facts which overcomes the natural presumption that he did not intend to charge for such services.—Erhart v. Dietrich, 118 Mo. 418, 24 S. W. 188.

[ooo] (Mo. 1894) The rendition by an adult child of services to its parent, in nursing and caring for him, does not raise a legal presumption of an agreement by the parent to pay for such services.—Finnell v. Gooch, 59 Mo. App. 209, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 80.

[p] (N. H. 1858) When parent and child reside together as members of one family, no contract between them to pay for services, or for articles furnished for family use, will be presumed, unless there is further proof of some contract or understanding that they are to be paid or accounted for.—Seavey v. Seavey, 37 N. H. 125.

[pp] (N. J. 1869) Where children, after becoming of age, remain with their father and are supported by him, and nothing was ever said as to compensation, the presumption is that none was expected or intended, and where one of the children, who had worked away from home at times, returned on his father's statement that he would need him, and worked for and was supported by the father, an agreement by the latter to pay wages cannot be implied.—Prickett v. Prickett's Adm'rs, 20 N. J. Eq. (5 C. E. Green) 478.

[ppp] (N. J. 1879) Where a daughter and her mother, who was very old and infirm, lived together, the former might recover compensation from the estate of the latter for services which were indispensable and rendered under circumstances that raised a presumption that she was to be paid, and that her mother intended to pay her therefor.—De Camp v. Wilson, 31 N. J. Eq. (4 Stew.) 656.

[q] (N. Y. 1860) The implication of a promise to pay for services rendered and accepted—e. g., for medical attendance—is less strong when the parties, though both adults, are parent and child, than in other cases; and if, in addition, it appears that the services were rendered without expectation on either side that compensation would be made, the son rendering them cannot afterwards recover on a quantum meruit.—Moore v. Moore, 3 Abb. Dec. 303.

[qq] (N. Y. 1864) A son cannot recover for services rendered his mother while a member of his family, in the absence of any agreement for compensation.—In re Kelly's Estate, Tuck. 28.

[qqq] (N. Y. 1874) A mother resided with her son and kept house for him, and after his death she presented a claim against his estate for services rendered by her as his housekeeper. There was no agreement between them that she should be paid for the services. Held, that the claim was not allowable, as the law would not imply an agreement to pay wages.—Cooper v. Turner, 2 Hun, 515, 5 Thomp. & C. 711.

[r] (N. Y. 1877) The services of a daughter in caring for a sick mother for four years are not gratuitous, as having been rendered by one member of the same family and household for another, where the daughter left a family of her own, at the request of her mother, when she began to perform the services.—Markey v. Brewster, 10 Hun, 16.

[rr] (N. Y. 1882) Where a mother performs services for her son, the services rendered do not raise an implied promise to pay for them.—Terry v. Bale, 1 Dem. Sur. 452.

[rrr] (N. Y. 1889) A claim by a father against the estate of his deceased son for services in taking care of stock, and for fodder and grain for the stock, and board for the son and his employés, will be disallowed where it does not appear that any of the items were ever presented to the son, and where there are no allusions to them on the son's books; and it appears that the father made up his charges solely from recollection, having no memoranda of the transactions; that the father and son had at least two settlements, and that a note was given by the son to the father, and money was often paid by one to the other.—In re Strickland, 5 N. Y. Supp. 854, 2 Con. Sur. 10.

[s] (N. Y. 1890) Upon her marriage plaintiff ceased to live with her parents, and became estranged from her mother. After several years the mother, who was then 80 years old, alone and helpless, sent for plaintiff to come and take care of her, and plaintiff did so for 50 weeks, and then left her. Held, that a promise to pay for the services would be inferred.—Wilsey v. Franklin, 57 Hun, 382, 10 N. Y. Supp. 833.

[ss] (N. Y. 1892) Plaintiff lived with and was supported by his mother, and she provided for him in her will, as for her other children. He and his wife had rendered some service in nursing and taking care of her in her old age. Held, that the presumption was that such service was gratuitous, and that plaintiff could not recover therefor without proof of an express employment and promise to pay.—Ulrich v. Ulrich, 60 N. Y. Super. Ct. (28 Jones & S.) 237, 17 N. Y. Supp. 721.

[sss] (N. Y. 1893) A promise to pay for services rendered to a parent by an adult child, who has been away from home, established a business, and supported himself, and then returns on the request of the parent, will be more readily inferred than where the child has continued to live with the parent after arriving at age, and has never had any other home.—Marion v. Farnan, 68 Hun, 383, 22 N. Y. Supp. 946.

[t] (N. Y. 1895) A claim by a daughter against the estate of her deceased mother for services rendered will not be allowed where it appears that claimant, before her mother's death, frequently said that she wanted to render such services in return for what her mother had done for her; that decedent had frequently declared her intention to distribute her property equally among her children; that all the children aided in taking care of her; and that shortly before her death she had given claimant a large portion of her estate.—In re Stevenson, 86 Hun, 325, 33 N. Y. Supp. 493.

[tt] (N. Y. 1895) Where a claim was made by a daughter against the estate of her deceased mother for services rendered to decedent, who lived with claimant, it cannot be presumed, as matter of law, that there was no agreement that claimant should be paid for her services.—In re Stevenson, 86 Hun, 325, 33 N. Y. Supp. 493.

[ttt] (N. C. 1832) Where a child, on arriving at full age, continues to live with and serve the parent, the relation of the parties is a circumstance from which to infer that the services were gratuitous.—Williams v. Barnes, 14 N. C. 348.

[u] (N. C. 1887) In the absence of evidence to show an agreement for compensation, express or implied, a child cannot recover for services rendered to the parent while living in the family, even though such services were rendered after the child attained majority, and were of a very burdensome and disagreeable nature.—Young v. Herman, 97 N. C. 280, 1 S. E. 792.

[uu] (Ohio, 1879) Where an adopted child, designated as the heir at law of the husband, renders services to his widow, in an action to recover from the widow for such services, the burden is on him to show an express contract; for the rule that the relation of parent and child repels the presumption that services rendered by the child after becoming of age are in expectation of payment applies to adopted children.—Finch v. Finch, 7 Ohio Dec. 673, 4 Wkly. Law Bul. 908.

[uuu] (Pa. 1832) The claims of a son for compensation for services rendered to his father after he arrives of age are not regarded favorably by the courts.—In re Walker's Estate, 3 Rawle, 243.

[v] (Pa. 1843) A child is not entitled to recover wages for services rendered from the estate of his deceased parent, except upon clear and unequivocal proof, leaving no doubt that the relation between the parties was not that of parent and child, but of master and servant.—Appeal of Candor, 5 Watts & S. 513.

[vv] (Pa. 1849) Services rendered by a son to his father, at the request of his father, on the basis of master and servant, and not on that of parent and child, constitute a good cause of action.—Steel v. Steel, 12 Pa. (2 Jones) 64.

[vvv] (Pa. 1870) The fact that decedent boarded with her son-in-law and daughter at a fixed price per annum is a strong indication, but not conclusive evidence, that services rendered her by her daughter were also upon a contract basis, and to be paid for.—Appeal of Diehl, 2 Leg. Gaz. 113.

[w] (Pa. 1874) Where a daughter sues her father's estate for wages for services, she must prove an express contract and an unequivocal acknowledgment of the existence of the debt within six years of the commencement of the suit.—Watson's Ex'rs v. Stem, 76 Pa. (26 P. F. Smith) 121.

[ww] (Pa. 1882) The law will not imply a promise on the part of a father to pay to his adult married daughter wages for services rendered while she and her husband resided with him and made part of his household.—Houck's Ex'rs v. Houck, 99 Pa. 552.

[www] (Pa. 1882) Where a son takes his parents into his house and cares for them, no contract is implied, and there can be no recovery for his services, in the absence of an express contract to pay therefor.—Appeal of Miller, 100 Pa. 568, 45 Am. Rep. 394.

[x] (Pa. 1885) Although the relation of father and son rebuts the presumption of an implied contract where one is a member of the other's family, or where the services are such as would ordinarily be rendered gratuitously as between parent and child, yet where the son had a family of his own, and lived at a distance from his father, and at the latter's request rendered services in collecting rent due to his father, held, that the son could recover compensation from his father's estate on an implied contract.—In re Young's Estate, 32 Pittsb. Leg. J. (O. S.) 403.

[xx] (Vt. 1844) Where a woman, after the death of her husband, returns to her father's house to reside, and continues to reside with him many years, rendering such services as are ordinarily rendered by a child in the family of a parent, it is incumbent upon her, if she would claim payment for such services after the death of her father, to show that she performed the services expecting at the time to be paid therefor, and that the father so understood it, or that he had sufficient reason to believe that she intended to charge him for such services.—Fitch v. Peckham, 16 Vt. 150.

[xxx] (Vt. 1861) In an action by a child to recover for services rendered to the parent, it is not necessary that the proof in support of the claim for payment for such services should be full, unequivocal, and conclusive; but such proof is established by a fair preponderance of the evidence.—Putnam v. Town, 34 Vt. 429.

[y] (Vt. 1861) Where the relation of a parent and child exists, and the child, after coming of age and while in the parent's family, renders services and receives support, the law will not imply therefrom that there was a contract either that the services of the child or the support furnished by the parent should be paid for. There must be proof either of express agreement for pay, or it must be shown that both parties at the time understood that the services were to be paid for.—Putnam v. Town, 84 Vt. 429.

[yy] (Vt. 1868) There is no distinction between adopted children and other children in the application of the rule that if a child, after becoming of age, remains in the parent's service, the law will imply no promise on the part of the parent to pay for the labor, but an express promise must be proved.—Lunay v. Vantyne, 40 Vt. 501.

[yyy] (Va. 1878) In the absence of an express contract, the mere fact that a daughter renders services to her aged mother does not raise an implied contract for compensation therefor, enforceable against the estate of the mother.—Harshberger's Adm'r v. Alger, 31 Grat. 52.

[z] (W. Va. 1882) As between parent and an adult child, any claim for compensation for services must be determined from the particular circumstances of the case.—Stansbury v. Stansbury's Adm'rs, 20 W. Va. 23.

[zz] (W. Va. 1886) It being apparent that a natural son and his father dealt at arm's length as strangers, and that the son rendered valuable services to the father, held, that compensation was due, although there was no express contract.—Broderick v. Broderick, 28 W. Va. 378.

[zzz] (Wis. 1856) Where a son after majority continues to reside with and work for his father, there may be circumstances short of an express promise on the part of the father entitling the son to recover compensation.—Fisher v. Fisher, 5 Wis. 472.

§ 18. Parent and son-in-law or daughter-in-law.

[a] (Ind. 1851) A son-in-law, living with the parents of his wife, cannot recover for occasional services performed in that capacity, without proof of an express contract that they were to be paid for.—Oxford v. McFarland, 3 Ind. 156.

[b] (Iowa, 1876) Where a father-in-law boarded in the family of his son-in-law, the father-in-law being a man of wealth and contributing nothing by labor or money to the maintenance of the household, while the son-in-law was dependent upon his labor for his support, held, that the presumption did not arise that the services were gratuitous by reason of the relationship.—Rogers v. Millard, 44 Iowa, 466.

[c] (Mich. 1879) Where one living with his wife in his father-in-law's family, without paying any board, voluntarily renders services for the family, without expecting pay, he cannot recover therefor.—Coe v. Wager, 42 Mich. 49, 3 N. W. 248.

[d] (Mo. 1893) The rule that a promise to pay for care and nursing may be inferred from circumstances is not altered by the fact that such services are rendered by the daughter and son-in-law of the recipient.—Ramsey v. Hicks, 53 Mo. App. 190.

[e] (N. J. 1885) Where a son-in-law renders services to a father-in-law in his lifetime, without any agreement or expectation of compensation, and it is shown that the services are such as he would have rendered without compensation, he is not entitled, in a suit against the executor, to recover for such services.—Bonney v. Haydock, 40 N. J. Eq. (13 Stew.) 513, 4 Atl. 766.

[f] (N. Y. 1865) A laborer, hired for a certain time and for a certain price, intermarried with his employer's daughter, who was a member of her father's family, and continued to work for his wife's father for several years; the wife in the meanwhile remaining with her father and rendering services for him, and he furnishing her and the children who were the issue of her marriage with food and clothing. There was no agreement made in regard to the services of the daughter, or the food and clothing of herself and her children, or the services of her husband. Held, that the father was not liable for the services of his daughter, that he could not claim compensation for the food and clothing of herself and children, and that he was bound to pay her husband what his services were reasonably worth after the time for which he had been engaged had expired.—Conger v. Van Aernum, 43 Barb. 602.

[g] (N. Y. 1887) The mother-in-law of defendant remained with him seven years after his wife's death as housekeeper and took care of his young children. Held that, without some evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that she remained there as a member of the family, and without any implied obligation on the part of defendant to pay her for her services.—Reid v. Farrar, 6 N. Y. St. Rep. 199.

[h] (N. C. 1896) Where a son-in-law and his family and mother-in-law for 14 years lived together as "one family" at her house, without any agreement for payment for services on either side, and no payment was made except in mutual services, he was not entitled to recover from her estate, on an implied promise, the value of his own and wife's services to her during that time.—Callahan v. Wood, 118 N. C. 752, 24 S. E. 542.

[i] (Ohio, 1832) Where a son-in-law lived in the family of his wife's father, and worked for him, assumpsit will not lie for wages, unless there was an agreement.—Lovet v. Price Wright, 89.

[j] (Pa. 1865) The relationship of father-in-law and son-in-law is not of itself sufficient to rebut the presumption of liability for services rendered by one to the other.—Appeal of Amey, 49 Pa. (13 Wright) 126.

[k] (Pa. 1871) The relationship between a father-in-law and a son-in-law is not of itself sufficient to overcome the presumption of a promise to pay for services in nursing and taking care of the father-in-law by his daughter, the wife of the son-in-law.—Schoch's Adm'r v. Garrett, 69 Pa. (19 P. F. Smith) 144.

[l] (Pa. 1873) The relationship of son-in-law is not enough in itself to rebut the presumption of a promise to pay for services, though the mutual relationship and the circumstances of the parties, aided by such relationship, may be sufficient.—In re Kendig's Estate, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 563.

[m] (Pa. 1882) A claim for services against an estate of a decedent, by a daughter-in-law whose husband is living, cannot be sustained unless a precise and definite contract is proven by satisfactory evidence.—In re Stonaker's Estate, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 446.

[n] (Pa. 1882) Where services are performed for a mother-in-law without any express contract for compensation, the law presumes a promise to pay what they are reasonably worth.—Smedley v. Ormsby, 13 Lanc. Bar, 136.

[o] (Pa. 1892) Where a woman spends a part of each year with her daughter for a number of years, and no demand is ever made for board or attendance, this is sufficient, in the absence of any express stipulation, to negative the presumption that services rendered principally by the daughter in her last sickness were not gratuitous; and a claim made by the daughter's husband for such services stands upon no different footing than if made by the daughter or any other member of the family.—

[p] (Pa. 1892) A son-in-law cannot recover for nursing, etc., his mother-in-law, where it appears that the decedent, an aged woman, had for several years divided her time among her children, living as a member of their respective families, without paying or agreeing to pay for care and attention.—Gerz v. Weber, 151 Pa. 396, 25 Atl. 82, 31 Wkly. Notes Cas. 77.

[q] (Tex. 1871) An obligation to pay for services rendered by a son-in-law to his father-in-law is implied.—Wright's Adm'x v. Donnell, 34 Tex. 291.

[r] (Vt. 1865) Where A. upon his marriage took up his abode in the family of his father-in-law, B., no contract would be implied that he was to pay for his living or be paid for his services.—Sprague v. Waldo, 38 Vt. 139.

[s] (Va. 1825) A charge made by a son-in-law for nursing his father-in-law in his last illness, where there is no contract, express or implied, ought not to be allowed.—Williams v. Stonestreet, 3 Rand. 559.

[t] (Wis. 1896) Where a son-in-law furnished board, lodging, and services to his father-in-law, on his periodical visits with him during a period of several years, without demanding any compensation, but kept a record of the visits and services, and after his father-in-law's death, being dissatisfied with the share that was left to his wife by his father-in-law, he charged up these items, he could not enforce his claim against the estate.—In re Schmidt's Estate, 93 Wis. 120, 67 N. W. 37.

§ 19. Parent and stepchild.

Services and earnings of stepchildren in general, see "Parent and Child," vol. 37, cc. 2253, 2254, § 156.

[a] (Cal. 1857) Where plaintiff sustains to defendants the relation of stepmother, and assumes a certain position inconsistent with her claim for services, the proof should either show an express contract, or conclusive circumstances from which a contract might be justly implied, as being contemplated by the parties during the continuance of the relation.—Murdock v. Murdock, 7 Cal. 511.

[b] (Mich. 1889) Where a woman of 25 years of age has lived for 6 years with her stepmother, fom whom her father had been divorced, working as a dressmaker, and giving some of her earnings to her stepmother, and doing some of the household work, she cannot recover from her stepmother for services rendered.—Feiertag v. Feiertag, 73 Mich. 297, 41 N. W. 414.

[c] (Mich. 1889) There is no implied promise by a stepfather to pay for services rendered after she became of age by a stepdaughter, who lived in his family from the time she was 9 years old until her marriage at 26; she having performed the same duties, and lived as a member of the family, receiving her board, clothing, and money from time to time, the same after as before she became of age.—Harris v. Smith, 79 Mich. 54, 44 N. W. 169, 6 L. R. A. 702.

[d] (Mo. 1856) Where a stepson continues to reside in the family of the stepfather after majority, he cannot maintain a claim against him for work and labor, as the law will not imply a contract to pay him for the services rendered.—Guenther v. Birkicht's Adm'r, 22 Mo. 439.

[e] (N. Y. 1849) Where a stepfather maintained his stepchild in his family, treating him as a member of it, the law will not imply a promise to pay for such services, and no recovery can be had therefor, unless an express promise is shown.—Williams v. Hutchinson, 5 Barb. 122.

[f] (N. Y. 1890) In an action for services rendered and for goods furnished to defendant's intestate, the fact that plaintiff was the stepson of decedent, and a member of his family, does not require him to prove an express contract by decedent to pay, but it is sufficient if he proves facts and circumstances showing that decedent expected to pay, and plaintiff to receive, the value of such services and goods.—Davis v. Gallagher, 55 Hun, 593, 9 N. Y. Supp. 11, judgment reversed (1891) 124 N. Y. 487, 26 N. E. 1045.

[g] (Ohio, 1889) A stepdaughter, residing with her stepfather as a member of his family, cannot recover for services rendered by her for him, in the absence of proof of an express promise to pay therefor, or of facts and circumstances from which such promise may be fairly inferred.—Hawthorne v. McClure, 2 O. C. D. 390.

[h] (Pa. 1850) A female, living with her stepfather while in her minority, is not entitled, after arriving at full age, to recover from him wages for services rendered without proof of a contract.—Lantz v. Frey, 14 Pa. (2 Harris) 201; 19 Pa. (7 Harris) 366.

[i] (Pa. 1867) Where a stepdaughter at the request of her stepfather gave up a lucrative occupation to attend on him, and remained with him for some time after her mother's death and until he remarried, there was sufficient evidence of value to sustain a verdict in an action for services rendered.—Mellor v. Lanagan, 6 Phila. 232.

[j] (Pa. 1883) The principles which govern cases of claims between parent and child have application in the relation of stepmother and stepson, where a family relation exists between them; but there must be proof of an express contract to pay for services before there can be a recovery.—In re Guss' Estate, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 65.

[k] (Tex. 1896) On the trial of the right of property belonging to the community estate of decedent and his wife, between decedent's children and judgment creditors of their mother's husband by a second marriage, it was error to instruct that, as an offset to the half interest in the property claimed by the children, they should be charged with the value of their board at the home of their mother and stepfather, it appearing that the board was given to them, and while receiving it they did work about the place.—Nichols v. McCormick (Civ. App.) 35 S. W. 530.

[l] (Wis. 1877) To entitle a stepson to recover from his stepfather compensation for services rendered while the son remained a member of the father's family after attaining his majority, the jury must be satisfied by a preponderance of evidence that there was an express promise to make compensation. Such promise may be established by circumstantial evidence; but a promise must be established, as the law does not imply a contract from rendering and acceptance of service.—Wells v. Perkins, 43 Wis. 160.

§ 20. Brothers and sisters.

[a] (Del. 1860) As between brothers, the law will not imply a contract by either brother to pay for support and maintenance.—State v. Conmoway, 2 Houst. 206.

[b] (Iowa, 1870) Where a sister lived with and kept house for her brother, receiving support therefor, the law does not imply a promise on his part to pay for her services.—Scully v. Scully's Ex'r, 28 Iowa, 548.

[c] (Iowa, 1883) Where decedent went to live with his sister and family, and they lived together as one family, cultivating their adjoining farms together, and using the produce indiscriminately for common support, the sister, in the absence of an express contract to the contrary, was not entitled to recover either for domestic services rendered deceased or for his board.—Keegan v. Malone's Estate, 62 Iowa, 208, 17 N. W. 461.

[d] (Kan. 1870) A sister resided in her brother's family, performed the usual duties of a housekeeper, and, in return, received clothing and a home for eight years. No account was kept, and no agreement was made that she should receive wages. Held, that the law would not imply a contract for services rendered, nor hold the brother's estate chargeable with a claim made for such services, when the claim was not made until after the brother's death.—Ayres v. Hull, 5 Kan. 419.

[e] (Mo. 1891) Where a sister lives with her brother, and occupies a family relation, keeping house for him, the implication of a promise to pay her for her services does not arise, but she must establish a contractual relation, express or implied.—Callahan v. Riggins, 43 Mo. App. 130.

[f] (N. Y. 1853) The law will not imply a contract for compensation by a decedent to his brother for services during five years, where the claimant was boarded and clothed by his brother, but there was no evidence of any agreement for compensation or demand therefor.—Bowen v. Bowen, 2 Bradf. Sur. 336.

[g] (N. Y. 1875) Where plaintiff's sister-in-law became a member of his family on the invitation of his wife, performing services in the household and receiving board for herself and children, no intimation being given that pecuniary compensation should be made, such sister-in-law did not occupy the position of a servant and was not liable to pay for board.—Van Kuren v. Saxton, 3 Hun, 547.

[h] (N. Y. 1878) A woman dwelt 23 years in her brother's house; herself, husband, and children all living with him as one family. Held that, in the absence of any proof of a promise by the brother to compensate her for her services in the dairy for the last six years, she could not recover therefor in an action against his administratrix.—Carpenter v. Weller, 15 Hun, 134.

[i] (N. Y. 1880) Where services are rendered by a sister residing in the family of the intestate, the law will not imply a promise to pay for them.—Keller v. Stuck, 4 Redf. Sur. 294.

[j] (Ohio, 1890) Where sisters lived together in the same family supported by the mother, and one of them was insane and under the charge of a guardian, the other was not entitled to compensation for services in caring for her insane sister, in the absence of any agreement therefor with the guardian.—In re Dunn's Estate, Prob. R. 297, reversed in Dunn's Estate v. Dunn (1890) 23 Wkly. Law Bul. 328.

[k] (Pa. 1893) Where a brother gives a helpless sister a home and cares for her as long as she lives, there is no presumption, from the relationship of the parties, that the services rendered were voluntary and without expectation of payment, but such fact must be proved by the party asserting it.—In re Shubart's Estate, 154 Pa. 230, 26 Atl. 202; Appeal of Walborn, Id.

[l] (Pa. 1895) The relationship of brother and sister is not such as involves any duty of support, or negatives the implied contract to pay for board furnished; and a sister who furnishes board to her brother is entitled to recover therefor, unless there was some understanding between the parties to the contrary.—Stafford v. Devereux, 166 Pa. 277, 31 Atl. 87.

[m] (R. I. 1893) Plaintiff's insane sister being brought by her guardian to live with plaintiff, the latter gave up her former occupation, and was constant in attendance on her sister until the latter's death, seven years later, the guardian furnishing support for both from the sister's estate. Plaintiff put in a claim against her sister's estate for her services. Held, that she need not prove an express promise to pay.—Fuller v. Mowry, 18 R. I. 424, 28 Atl. 606.

[n] (Tenn. 1878) Where a brother and sister lived together for many years, the sister should not be allowed compensation for her services as housekeeper, in the absence of any agreement to pay for such services, as a person should not be allowed to demand compensation for services which were rendered gratuitously at the time.—Taylor v. Taylor, 69 Tenn. (1 Lea) 83.

[a] (Mass. 1888) A woman who marries and lives with a man till his death cannot recover for her services in keeping his house, though she learns after his death that he had a former wife living and not divorced.—Cooper v. Cooper, 147 Mass. 370, 17 N. E. 892, 9 Am. St. Rep. 721.

[b] (Mo. 1845) Where a married man represents himself to be a widower, and thus induces a woman to marry him, living his first wife, such woman may recover of him for her services during such time as she may live with him.—Higgins v. Breen, 9 Mo. 497.

[c] (N. Y. 1858) A woman had lived with a man as his wife, both believing such relation to exist, and upon his death it appeared that the marriage between them was void. Held, there was no implied promise raised entitling her to recover for her services.—Cropsey v. Sweeney, 27 Barb. 310.

[d] (N. Y. 1892) Where a woman cohabits with a man, keeps house for him, and assists on the farm, in order to recover for the work and labor done she must prove an express contract.—Rhodes v. Stone, 68 Hun, 624, 17 N. Y. Supp. 561.

[e] (Pa. 1843) A woman living with a man in a state of concubinage cannot recover compensation for services performed for him, without proof of a contract of hiring.—Swires v. Parsons, 5 Watts & S. 357.

§ 22. Uncle or aunt and nephew or niece.

[a] (Ill. 1889) Services rendered by those sustaining near family relations, in the absence of a contract, raise no presumption of an intention to charge or pay therefor; and therefore a claim filed by a niece against the estate of an uncle for services alleged to have been rendered him in his lifetime cannot be maintained in the absence of an express or implied contract for payment.—Patterson v. Collar, 31 Ill. App. 340, affirmed Collar v. Patterson (1891) 137 Ill. 403, 27 N. E. 604.

[b] (Ind. 1873) A girl, upon the death of her mother, was turned away from home by her father at the age of 14, and at the suggestion of her aunt and her grandmother she went to live with an uncle and aunt, with whom she remained until she was 25 years of age, when she married. She subsequently brought suit against the uncle for work and labor. No express contract to pay her was asserted, and it appeared that she was kindly treated and provided for in a better manner than she would have been if she had merely received ordinary wages. Held, that she was not entitled to recover for her services.—Hays v. McConnell, 42 Ind. 285.

[c] (Ky. 1843) Two nephews entered into the service of their uncle, a bachelor, and inherited his real and part of his personal estate, which exceeded greatly a reasonable compensation for their services. Held, that no implied contract for compensation was to be inferred.—Weir v. Weir's Adm'r, 42 Ky. (3 B. Mon.) 645, 39 Am. Dec. 487.

[d] (Mich. 1886) A niece who has been taken into her uncle's household, and treated as one of the family, cannot, in the absence of an express contract therefor, recover from her uncle's estate for domestic services rendered by her.—Robinson v. McAfee, 59 Mich. 375, 26 N. W. 643.

[e] (N. Y. 1867) Where plaintiff, at the request of her uncle, went to live in his family, and remained with him several years, rendering services without an agreement as to compensation, and it appeared that the uncle had admitted an intention to pay her something, a finding allowing her compensation for her services will not be disturbed.—Thornton v. Grange, 46 Barb. 507.

[f] (Pa. 1848) An infant, while out of place, was permitted to reside with his uncle, and during such time was provided with food and clothing, and worked in the same way as the children of the family. Held, that the law did not imply a contract to pay for such services of the infant.—Defrance v. Austin, 9 Pa. (9 Barr) 309.

[g] (Pa. 1862) Where a niece was taken by her uncle into his family after her mother had married a second time and died, and there was nothing to show a disposition of the stepfather to support her, such uncle was entitled to compensation for her maintenance.—In re Dunkel's Account, 1 Woodw. Dec. 58.

[h] (Pa. 1868) In the absence of proof of a previous contract, an aunt, who was an inmate of the same family in which a minor nephew resided, cannot recover for her services in attending the minor.—In re Souder's Estate, 2 Woodw. Dec. 235.

[i] (Pa. 1870) Where a nephew, on a visit to his uncle, was taken sick and remained with him for some time, the uncle was entitled to compensation, notwithstanding the relationship.—In re Eckert's Estate, 2 Pears. 476.

[j] (Pa. 1881) An aunt cannot recover for services rendered to her niece, where there was no contract to pay, and, until after the death of the niece, no intention to charge for the services.—In re Strauch's Estate, 2 Leg. Rec. Rep. 231.

[k] (Pa. 1882) The relationship of uncle and niece will not alone repel the presumption that, where services are rendered, they are to be paid for.—In re Hamway's Estate, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 531; Mewes v. Parke, Id. 532.

[l] (Pa. 1882) The relationship of uncle and niece by marriage will not in itself repel the presumption of an implied contract to pay for services performed.—In re Walker's Estate, 14 Lanc. Bar, 64.

[m] (Pa. 1886) A claim by a nephew for services furnished a decedent will be allowed, where they were not only accepted by the decedent, but were shown to be reasonably worth the sum demanded.—In re Fox's Estate, 43 Leg. Int. 498.

[n] (Pa. 1887) Where a nephew accompanied his aunt abroad, she saying that she would make it all right with him, but he made no demand for compensation within the 18 months in which the aunt lived after her return, a claim by him against the estate for his services was properly disallowed.—In re Lally's Estate, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 177.

[o] (Pa. 1889) Where a nephew, while on a visit to an aunt, rendered her valuable services, the fact of the relationship did not rebut the presumption that he acted under a promise of compensation.—In re Brown's Estate, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 428.

[p] (Vt. 1845) Where defendant, from whom compensation was claimed for services, took the plaintiff, who was his niece, into his family when she was a child, to live with him until she should become of age, it was incumbent on her to show that the services were performed under such circumstances as to justify an expectation that the pecuniary compensation would be required.—Andrus v. Foster, 17 Vt. 556.

[q] (W. Va. 1893) Where a minor lives with his uncle as a member of his family, the uncle furnishing him with food, raiment, and shelter, and the minor rendering to his uncle his services, without any contract as to compensation for support or wages to be paid, the minor cannot recover the value of his services, though their value may have been greater than that of the support.—Riley v. Riley, 38 W. Va. 283, 18 S. E. 569.

[a] (Kan. 1874) While the law will sometimes imply a promise to pay for services performed, when there has been no express contract, yet it will not imply a promise on the part of one party to pay for services rendered under a direct and express contract with another.—Perry v. Bailey, 12 Kan. 539.

[b] (Mass. 1875) The general agent of the managers of a musical festival wrote plaintiff, promising, as security for the payment of services to be rendered by him, to guaranty a certain sum, provided the proceeds of the festival resulted in that amount being placed to the agent's credit, and stipulated that neither the executive committee nor any person connected with the festival, except the agent, should be responsible for the fulfillment of the contract, and that, should the festival result in a loss, the plaintiff should have no claim against the agent or anybody else connected therewith. Held, that plaintiff could not maintain an action against the management to recover a reasonable compensation for his services after the festival resulted in a loss.—Zerrahn v. Ditson, 117 Mass. 553.

[c] (Mo. 1886) Where a person agrees to serve another gratuitously, no promise to pay a reasonable compensation can be implied.—Suits v. Taylor, 20 Mo. App. 166.

[d] (Mo. 1887) Where one other than the owner of land makes an express agreement for the erection of buildings thereon, no agreement of the owner to pay therefor can be implied.—Kansas City Planing Mill Co. v. Brundage, 25 Mo. App. 268.

[e] (N. Y. 1867) An implied agreement to pay for materials, when not inconsistent with an existing written agreement between the parties, will sustain an action to recover the value of such materials.—Smith v. Lippincott, 49 Barb. 398.

[f] (Pa. 1858) Plaintiff boarded defendant's father at defendant's request at a fixed rate. The father having become infirm and requiring more attention, a higher rate was asked, acceded to, and paid regularly by defendant till his father's death, which occurred shortly afterwards. Held, that plaintiff could not recover, for nursing and other services, a compensation in addition to that paid by defendant.—Gifford v. Halfman, 3 Phila. 127.

[g] (Tenn. 1847) Where parties originally entered into a special agreement for certain services, which they afterwards abandoned, either by consent or by action, and circumstances showed that it was the intention to waive its terms, and the plaintiff proceeded to execute the work, and the defendant accepted it and derived the benefit therefrom, plaintiff was entitled to recover reasonable value for his work.—Allen v. McNew, 27 Tenn. (8 Humph.) 46.

[d] Assumpsit will not lie for labor and materials furnished under a sealed contract.

(Me. 1853) Porter v. Androscoggin & K. R. Co., 37 Me. 349.

[e] (U. S. 1864) While a special contract remains executory, the party who seeks compensation for work done under it must sue upon it. When it has been fully executed according to its terms, and nothing remains to be done but the payment of the price, he may sue either on it, or in indebitatus assumpsit, relying, in this last case, upon the common counts; and in either case the contract will determine the rights of the parties.—Dermott v. Jones, 69 U. S. (2 Wall.) 1, 17 L. Ed. 762.

[f] (U. S. 1823) Assumpsit will not lie for work and labor done in the lifetime of defendant's intestate under a special contract for payment by the conveyance of land, without showing fraud in the making of such contract.—Powling v. Varnum, Fed. Cas. No. 11,364 [2 Cranch, C. C. 423].

[g] (Ala. 1852) When an overseer, by agreement with his employer, is to receive a certain portion of the crop raised as compensation for his services, he cannot recover in assumpsit for work and labor done.—Anderson v. Rice, 20 Ala. 239.

[h] (Ark. 1847) The action of assumpsit affords a complete remedy on an account for work and labor, and in the absence of any peculiar facts a party cannot resort to equity for relief.—Wolf v. Irons, 8 Ark. (3 Eng.) 63.

[i] (D. C. 1876) A party who has fully performed a special contract may recover a judgment in an action of assumpsit on the common counts; but he is restricted in his evidence, as to the amount of his claim, to the terms of such contract, and it is erroneous, in such case, to make allowances on the principle of a quantum meruit, unless for the performance of work, or for materials not provided for in the contract.—Campbell v. District of Columbia, 2 MacArthur, 533.

[j] (Ind. 1891) In an action on a note given for services to be performed, there can be no recovery on a quantum meruit.—Schaffner v. Kober, 2 Ind. App. 409, 28 N. E. 871.

[k] (Ky.) Indebitatus assumpsit for work and labor will not lie where the plaintiff was to be paid in specific articles, and not in money.—(1826) Cochran v. Tatum, 19 Ky. (3 T. B. Mon.) 404; (1829) Id., 24 Ky. (1 J. J. Marsh.) 394.

[l] (Ky. 1853) When there is a special agreement, the action must be founded on it, unless for some reason it cannot be maintained thereon.—Western v. Sharp, 53 Ky. (14 B. Mon.) 177.

[m] (Me. 1877) Where there was an express contract, plaintiff cannot abandon it, and recover on an implied contract for the value, until he proves the contract, or gives secondary evidence of its terms, and shows an excuse for the departure from them.—Holden Steam Mill Co. v. Westervelt, 67 Me. 446.

[n] (Md. 1801) Where there is a special agreement for the construction of a house, a recovery cannot be had on the general counts for work and labor.—Hannan v. Lee, 1 Har. & J. 131.

[o] (Md. 1823) Where a party declares on a special contract and fails to prove it, but proves an agreement and the work done according to the terms of it, it raises a duty for which a general indebitatus assumpsit will lie.—Speake v. Sheppard, 6 Har. & J. 81.

[p] (Md. 1860) Where there is a special contract, the plaintiff cannot recover in assumpsit for work and labor, unless the work under the contract was fully performed and accepted by defendant, or the contract was abandoned by mutual consent.—Denmead v. Coburn, 15 Md. 29.

[q] (Mass. 1855) Under St. 1852, c. 312, § 2, providing that a count on an account annexed may be used when one or more items are claimed, either of which would be correctly described by any one of the common counts, money due on a special contract, which has been fully performed, may be recovered under a count on an account annexed.—Morse v. Potter, 70 Mass. (4 Gray) 292.

[r] (Mass. 1882) If a written contract for work to be done is fully performed, the stipulated price may be recovered in an action upon a common count or an account annexed.—Simmons v. Lawrence Duck Co., 133 Mass. 298.

[s] (Mo. 1833) One who has a covenant for payment of work and labor cannot abandon it and resort to assumpsit.—Crump v. Mead, 3 Mo. 233.

[t] (Mo. 1858) No recovery can be had against a county on a quantum meruit for erecting a courthouse for the county, as recovery must be had under a special contract in conformity with the statute.—Wolcott v. Lawrence County, 26 Mo. 272.

[u] (Mo. 1889) In an action for services rendered at defendants' request, plaintiff's evidence tended to show that he was to buy the farm, on which the labor was expended, for money advanced by defendants, and move on it, and cultivate it, and have half of it. Defendants' evidence was that plaintiff was to buy the farm, and move on it, yielding defendants a certain rental while they allowed him to live on it. Held that, as plaintiff's evidence showed that his rights were based on an express contract, the action on implied assumpsit for the reasonable value of his services would not lie.—Clarke v. Kane, 37 Mo. App. 258.

[v] (Mo. 1892) The rule permitting an action of assumpsit on a quantum meruit in case of a specific contract is not limited to "building contracts," the only exception being contracts for personal labor for a specified term.—Moore v. H. Gaus & Sons Mfg. Co., 113 Mo. 98, 20 S. W. 975.

[vv] (N. H. 1849) Under a contract providing that for labor and material to be expended by plaintiff upon lands belonging to defendant plaintiff should be paid as much as the improvements he makes upon the land should be worth, he cannot recover therefor in an action of indebitatus assumpsit, if the contract contain a condition upon the happening of which he is to receive no compensation.—Streeter v. Sumner, 19 N. H. 516.

[w] (N. Y. 1817) Where a special contract is still subsisting, the party cannot recover under the common counts compensation for work and labor which he performed under the special agreement.—Clark v. Smith, 14 Johns. 326.

[ww] (N. Y. 1848) In an action for work and materials, where it appears that they were furnished pursuant to a contract, the plaintiff must prove the terms of the contract. He cannot, in the first instance, abandon it entirely, and recover on a quantum meruit, without any proof of its terms, its fulfillment, the deviations, if any, and the extra work.—Smith v. Smith, 3 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Sandf.) 206.

[x] (N. Y. 1854) Where a claim is for patterns made pursuant to a contract, a complaint for work, labor, and material is the proper form for the action, rather than for goods sold and delivered.—Prince v. Down, 2 E. D. Smith, 525.

[xx] (N. Y. 1860) The existence of a written contract is sufficient answer to an action upon a quantum meruit for work and material.—Alger v. Raymond, 20 N. Y. Super. Ct. (7 Bosw.) 418.

[xxx] (N. Y. 1863) The count of indebitatus assumpsit for work and labor, used prior to the Code of Procedure, was always sufficient to authorize a recovery for work and labor performed under a contract not under seal, unless the party performing the work and labor had failed to fulfill the contract; and the Code has not changed the former rule of pleading that a party who has wholly performed a special contract on his part may count upon the implied assumpsit of the other party to pay the stipulated price, and is not bound to declare specially upon the agreement.—Hosley v. Black, 28 N. Y. 438, 26 How. Prac. 97.

[y] (Pa. 1857) An action for work on a quantum meruit cannot be sustained, where there is no express abandonment of the written contract by the parties thereto.—McGrann v. North Lebanon R. Co., 29 Pa. (5 Casey) 82.

[yy] (Pa. 1874) Where a plumber agreed to do certain work as cheap or cheaper than any one else, the agreement was not such a special contract as required a declaration specifically framed, as a declaration in the common counts would be proper.—Kline v. Foster, 1 Walk. 250.

[z] (S. C. 1803) Assumpsit for work and labor will not lie, where there was a contract under seal, though the parties had agreed to waive it and referred the matters in dispute to arbitration, but the arbitrators had made no award.—Hurt v. Davis, 1 Brev. 304.

[zz] (Vt. 1849) When parties have made a special contract for the performance of labor, so long as the parties profess to proceed under the contract, no recovery in indebitatus assumpsit can be had for any labor performed under it, but the remedy must be by an action upon the contract.—Camp v. Barker, 21 Vt. 469.

§ 24. Modified or substituted agreement.

Performance of additional or extra work, see post, § 28.

Discharge of sureties of building contractor by modification of contract by including additional work, see "Principal and Surety," vol. 40, c. 1838, § 165.

[a] Plaintiffs had agreed under seal to perform certain work under a penalty, and were afterwards released by defendant by parol from a further performance under the agreement, who promised them that, if they would go on and complete the work, he would pay them for their labor. Held, that plaintiffs might recover in assumpsit on the substituted agreement.
—(Mass. 1830) Munroe v. Perkins, 26 Mass. (9 Pick.) 298, 20 Am. Dec. 475; (N. Y. 1817) Lattimore v. Harsen, 14 Johns. 330.

[b] (Ala. 1837) Where a contract for the erection of a building was so materially varied and the labor so greatly increased that plaintiffs could not perform it until several months after the expiration of the day appointed, the plaintiffs must resort to their remedy on the parol agreement, making the covenant inducement to the action.—McVoy v. Wheeler, 6 Port. 201.

[c] (Ala. 1853) When parties subsequently vary their written contract for the building of a house so as to require more work and materials, and an alteration in the structure, and a longer time for its completion, the workman is not obliged to sue on the original contract, but may recover on a quantum meruit.—Hutchison v. Cullum, 23 Ala. 622.

[d] (Cal. 1856) Where the terms of a special contract have been varied by a subsequent agreement, an action for the amount due should be in assumpsit.—Reynolds v. Jourdan, 6 Cal. 108.

[e] (Ill. 1875) Assumpsit will lie to recover under a parol agreement made subsequent to a written contract under seal, and providing for additional work not contemplated in such contract.—Daegling v. Schwartz, 80 Ill. 820.

[f] (Md. 1854) A contractor agreed to construct a section of railroad, and after part of the work was done a parol modification was made, by which the estimates were to be paid to the contractor according to his expenses until the work was completed; the understanding being that he was not to lose his per cent. on the work already done, and was to be protected from further loss, and save in such particulars the contract was to stand. Held that, the company having released the contractor by consent from the completion of the work under the contract, he could sue in assumpsit for work done.—Baltimore & O. Ry. Co. v. Resley, 7 Md. 297.

[g] (Mich. 1881) Where a person engaged to cut and skid logs, and put them into a river, is directed to cut no more, and to put the logs cut into a creek, and there is nothing to show what relation the cutting and skidding bear to the whole work, an action will lie on a quantum meruit, since the mode of performance is so changed that the contract price for what has been done cannot be determined.—Boyce v. Martin, 46 Mich. 239, 9 N. W. 265.

[h] (Minn. 1870) In an action upon a quantum meruit for services rendered as an architect, defendant set up a special contract, and payment of amount therein agreed. On the trial plaintiff offered evidence to show that after the contract, but before performance, the plans and character of the work were entirely changed, and no price fixed upon, and that services were rendered under the new arrangement. Held sufficient to authorize plaintiff to show the value of such services.—Marcotte v. Beaupre, 15 Minn. 152 (Gil. 117).

[i] (N. H. 1870) Where work is done under a special agreement, and there is a deviation from the original plan, the party is entitled to his quantum meruit for the extra labor performed.—Wheeden v. Fiske, 50 N. H. 125.

[j] (N. Y. 1859) In a case where the contract was indefinite in the first place, and constant alterations were made, the evidence did not establish a special contract, and the builder is entitled to recover on a quantum meruit.—Smith v. Coe, 2 Hilt. 365.

[k] (N. Y. 1860) A city advertised for the grading of a street according to certain specifications, and a written contract was made between a contractor and the city street commissioner, variant from that arising from the city's proposal and specifications, which alone was authorized by the city. The contractor performed a large amount of work, but failed to perform the contract made by the advertised specifications and his acceptance of the proposal. The contractor sued the city for compensation for the work done. Held, that the work could not be held to have been performed under any contract, but was done at large, and that there was no ground for a quantum meruit, since there was nothing from which a request could be implied to do the work otherwise than according to the authorized or substituted contract.—Bonesteel v. City of New York, 22 N. Y. 162.

[l] (N. Y. 1866) In an action for services, it appeared that plaintiff agreed with his father to remain and work for him, and should be paid therefor by he and his brother having the farm at his father's death. The parties made a new arrangement whereby plaintiff was to remain on the farm as long as defendant lived, and he and his brother were to have the farm at the defendant's death; they to support their mother and pay certain legacies. Held, that the plaintiff was to perform the service until defendant's death, and was not at liberty, because his services were to be paid for in land, to cease to labor for the defendant in his lifetime and to recover for the services theretofore rendered.—Campbell v. Campbell, 65 Barb. 639.

[m] (Ohio, 1832) Where plaintiff contracted to clear certain timber land for the defendant at a certain price per acre, but was excused from complete performance by the defendant, who then finished the work himself, plaintiff was entitled to compensation for the value of the work done.—Newman v. McGregor, 5 Ohio (5 Ham.) 349, 24 Am. Dec. 293.

[n] (Ohio, 1832) Where plaintiff agreed to perform certain work, to be paid for in wheat at a certain price per bushel, and was excused from a complete performance by the defendant, who, however, refused to make the settlement demanded by the plaintiff, on the ground that it was unreasonable, plaintiff was entitled to recover the value of his services in money.—Newman v. McGregor, 5 Ohio (5 Ham.) 349, 24 Am. Dec. 293.

[o] (Pa. 1889) Where a contract for the construction of a railroad did not simply contemplate that certain work should be done as well as other work, and it was done better by requirement of the engineer, the contract will be deemed abandoned as to prices fixed, and plaintiff can have recovery as on a quantum meruit.—McCauley v. Keller, 130 Pa. 53, 18 Atl. 607, 17 Am. St. Rep. 758.

§ 25. Contract invalid or unenforceable.

Invalidity of indenture of apprentice, see ante, § 14 [e].

Recovery for services rendered under contract voidable under statute of frauds, see "Frauds, Statute of," vol. 23, cc. 2450–2455, §§ 330, 331; c. 2469, § 342 [b].

[a] (Idaho, 1896) There can be no recovery under a quantum meruit for legal services rendered municipal corporations under a contract which the corporation had no authority to make.—Hampton v. Logan County Com'rs, 43 Pac. 324.

[b] (Ind. 1880) A recovery for the reasonable value of work done upon a quantum valebat presupposes an implied contract, and such recovery cannot be had if the alleged express contract was void as against public policy.—Stropes v. Greene County Com'rs, 72 Ind. 42.

[c] (Me. 1837) Where labor has been performed under a special contract, which is so uncertain and unintelligible that it cannot be understood, the law will imply a promise to pay the fair value of the services.—Cobb v. Stevens, 14 Me. (2 Shep.) 472.

[d] (Mass. 1878) In an action on an account annexed for work and labor, an unwritten special contract was shown by the evidence, under the terms of which plaintiff was to do certain work and receive in payment a lot of land, to be selected by him out of a number of lots which defendant owned, and part payment was to be taken in blacksmith work from a certain firm of blacksmiths. Plaintiff refused to accept payment as the contract provided. Held, that he could not rely on the fact that the contract was not in writing.—Riley v. Williams, 123 Mass. 506.

[e] (Mich. 1888) An action for work done and materials furnished to defendants by reason of a fraudulent contract made by them, and a failure to perform by a fraudulent execution of it, is not an action for nonperformance of a contract, and the rights of the parties are not determined by their contract relations, nor the measure of damages fixed by the prices stipulated therein.—Bush v. Brooks, 70 Mich. 466, 38 N. W. 562.

[f] (Mich. 1891) There is no ground for a recovery on the quantum meruit, on the theory that the minds of the parties had not met and consequently that there was no contract, where plaintiff and defendant, though they differed, each testified that there was a contract for a certain amount, and plaintiff knew at the time, and after he received a first payment from defendant, that the latter claimed that the contract was for a smaller amount than that claimed by plaintiff.—Shaw v. Armstrong, 88 Mich. 311, 50 N. W. 248.

[g] (Minn. 1876) Defendant's agent made a contract in behalf of his principal, which defendant afterwards refused to sign; plaintiff, in ignorance thereof, going on and doing the work thereunder. Held, that plaintiff might, on learning of defendant's refusal, stop work and recover on a quantum meruit for the value of the work done.—Hawkins v. Lange, 22 Minn. 557.

[h] (N. Y. 1827) Where defendant agreed to convey certain land to plaintiff if he served him until his majority, and defendant refused to convey the land and alleged that the contract was void, the plaintiff might elect to consider the contract as rescinded and recover for his services.—Burlingame v. Burlingame, 7 Cow. 92.

[i] (Tex. 1894) In an action against a bank for the reasonable value of services, a contract executed by the receiver of the bank may be proved, though it is invalid, by reason of the receiver's want of authority to agree to pay a fixed amount, and the reasonable value of the services may be recovered though the contract itself cannot be enforced.—Henrietta Nat. Bank v. Barrett (Civ. App.) 25 S. W. 456.

[j] (Vt. 1887) Plaintiff worked for defendant about one year without any special contract as to compensation; then the parties entered into a permanent contract as to his past and future earnings, but, by a failure to understand each other, the minds of the parties never met. Held, that plaintiff could recover, in assumpsit, what his services were reasonably worth.—Tucker v. Preston, 60 Vt. 473, 11 Atl. 726.

§ 26. Contract not fixing amount of compensation.

Additional or extra work similar to work under contract, see post, § 28.

[a] (Colo. 1894) Where a contract for services is proved, it is not necessary to show a fixed price for such services, but recovery may be had on a quantum meruit.—Button v. Higgins, 5 Colo. App. 167, 38 Pac. 390.

[b] (Md. 1813) Where the plaintiff agreed with the defendant to build him a house, and that after it should be built, if they should disagree as to the plaintiff's bill, two workmen should be selected to value the work, and they were selected and did value it, the court properly refused to instruct the jury that the action ought to have been brought on the special agreement.—Mudd v. Mudd, 3 Har. & J. 438.

[c] (Mass. 1849) If two persons enter into an agreement in writing under seal with a third that the latter shall sell and convey to one of them a certain lot of land at a specified price, to be paid for in part by the work of the other, which he binds himself to perform, and in part by the grantee, without any stipulation that the latter shall pay the former for the work so done, the law implies a promise, on his part, to pay a reasonable compensation therefor.—Blaisdell v. Gladwin, 58 Mass. (4 Cush.) 373.

[d] (Mich. 1874) Where persons who contract to erect a building know that their employer understands that they are undertaking the job at a fixed price, which they have given him as their estimate of the cost, they will be estopped from asserting, after completion of the work without undeceiving their employer, that there was no price fixed between them, and claiming that they are entitled to the market value for the work.—Davis v. Bush, 28 Mich. 432.

[dd] (Mo. 1859) Contractors were to be paid at a certain rate for all excavations of earth done under the contract. Unexpectedly to both contracting parties, the contractors, in fulfilling their contract, met with a large amount of indurated earth and cemented gravel, which they excavated. Held that, the price to be paid for the excavation of such material not being provided in the contract, the contractors were entitled to recover what the work was reasonably worth.—Shephard v. St. Charles Western Plank Road Co., 28 Mo. 373.

[e] (N. Y. 1834) Where a person engaged to excavate rock at a given sum per cubic yard, and to do ordinary excavation at another sum, in the course of the work excavated a large quantity of hard pan, for which no provision was made, and it was conceded that compensation was due beyond the ordinary price, he can recover upon a quantum meruit.—Dubois v. Delaware & H. Canal Co., 12 Wend. 334, affirmed Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Dubois (1835) 15 Wend. 87.

[f] (N. Y. 1871) Plaintiff refused to limit the expenses for the repair of a vessel to any fixed sum. Afterwards defendant wrote to plaintiff, directing him to make the repairs and to observe the strictest economy, stating that if he exceeded a certain sum to advise him. The vessel was in worse condition than supposed, and defendant was so informed. The plaintiff's bill was double the amount named in the defendant's letter. Held, that the completion of the repairs named in the letter was the primary intent of the contract, without any condition other than the observance of the strictest economy, and plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount of his bill.—Carll v. Spofford, 45 N. Y. 61.

[g] (N. Y. 1875) Plaintiff, without any contract as to the price to be paid, published in his newspaper certain advertisements, the matter for which was sent to him by the defendant's officers on slips printed in the English language and in type of a larger size than that ordinarily used in the plaintiff's paper. The plaintiff, in endeavoring to imitate in the German text, in which language his paper was printed, the size of the English type in which the slips were printed, caused the advertisements to occupy a larger space than they would have occupied, if printed in the ordinary type used in his paper. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to be paid, not for the space that the advertisements actually occupied, but only for the space that they would have occupied if they had been printed in the ordinary type of the paper.—Mierson v. City of New York, 6 Daly, 74.

[h] (N. Y. 1878) The board of commissioners of the New York sinking fund, having passed a resolution employing plaintiff to make a certain appraisal of property, required the comptroller to make arrangements with him for his fees. The plaintiff arranged with the comptroller to leave the amount of his compensation to him, on the comptroller's promise that it should be liberal and satisfactory. The comptroller failed to fix the amount for the services. Held, that plaintiff was entitled only to such sum as the jury should find was a reasonable compensation for the services performed.—Bleecker v. City of New York, 7 Daly, 439.

[i] (N. C. 1881) Plaintiff, a physician, made no charge upon his books for the services rendered defendant and for which suit was brought. Defendant claimed that they were intended to be and were gratuitous, and the jury found that defendant employed plaintiff, whose services were rendered without any express agreement to pay a definite sum. Held, that the law implied a promise to pay what they were reasonably worth.—Prince v. McRae, 84 N. C. 674.

[j] (Ohio, 1876) Upon one's performance of a verbal agreement made by her when 11 years old to work for a man until 18, held, that she might maintain an action on the quantum meruit.—Towsley v. Moore, 30 Ohio St. 184, 27 Am. Rep. 434.

[k] (Pa. 1874) An agreement by plaintiff to do work on a house as cheap or cheaper than anyone else will do it, is not such a special contract as requires a special declaration in an action for labor and material, but plaintiff may recover in an action of general indebitatus assumpsit.—Kline v. Foster, 1 Walk. 250.

[l] (Tex. 1866) In the absence of any evidence of the terms of a contract for the location of a land certificate, the only assumpsit implied by law therein is for the payment in money of the reasonable value of the services rendered.—Ross' Heirs v. Mitchell, 28 Tex. 150.

[m] (Wis. 1891) In an action against a railroad company for services, it appeared that plaintiff was appointed in writing an inspector of watches for defendant, conditioned that he should examine all watches presented to him accompanied with a written request from defendant's superintendent and certified to the superintendent that the watch was or was not up to the standard required by the company; that he would loan free of charge to each of defendant's employés, who should leave his watch for cleaning or repairing, a watch of the required standard until he had cleaned the employé's watch; that, whenever an employé took his watch elsewhere for repairs or cleaning, defendant would examine such watch as the employé proposed to carry in the mean time, charge him 25 cents, and indorse on his certificate to the company the words "Borrowed watch;" that he would keep a record book containing a description of watches examined for employés, furnish each employé a rate card for noting variations, and copy the weekly rating of each watch in his record book, and furnish a transcript thereof to the general inspector every three months, or oftener, if required; that, in case a certified watch did not come up to the standard, he should report the fact, withdraw the certificate of acceptance, and report the withdrawal. Held, that the services which were unprovided for in the contract as to compensation were separate services rendered to defendant, which the law implies a promise to pay for at their reasonable worth.—Link v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 80 Wis. 304, 50 N. W. 335.

§ 27. Performance not according to terms of contract.

[a] A recovery may be had for work and labor, when the defendant has accepted the work, though it does not amount to a complete performance of the special contract.

(Tenn. 1847) Allen v. McNew, 27 Tenn. (8 Humph.) 46.

[c] (Ala. 1838) Where plaintiff undertakes to do work by a fixed time or in a particular manner, but fails to perform it within the time, or according to the manner agreed, he cannot recover on the special contract; but, if the work done was of value to defendant, plaintiff may recover on a quantum meruit for work and labor.—Gazzam v. Kirby, 8 Port. 253.

[d] (Ala. 1859) If work is done under a special contract, but not in a workmanlike manner, and is, nevertheless, accepted and used by the employer, and is of any value to him, the workman is entitled to recover its reasonable value, not exceeding the price stipulated in the special contract.—English v. Wilson, 34 Ala. 201.

[e] (Ind. 1851) Where one has entered into a special agreement to perform work for another and furnish materials, and work is done and materials furnished, but not in the manner stipulated in the contract, yet, if they are accepted and used by the other party, he is answerable to the amount whereby he is benefited, on an implied promise to pay for the value he has received, though no action can be maintained on the special contract.—McKinney v. Springer, 3 Ind. 59, 54 Am. Dec. 470.

[f] (Ind. 1853) Where one party to a contract has not complied with its terms, but, professing to act under it, has done for the other party something of value, no action will lie on the contract, but the party thus benefited will be liable on the quantum meruit, in an amount not, however, to exceed that agreed on for performance of the contract.—Major v. McLester, 4 Ind. 591.

[g] (Iowa, 1864) A party to a contract, who has not performed it fully, may recover upon a quantum meruit so much of the contract price as remains after deducting what it will cost to make and complete the contract as he agreed.—McClay v. Hedge, 18 Iowa, 66.

[h] (Ky. 1828) Where in a contract the covenant to build a house in a plain, strong, workmanlike manner is a condition precedent to the covenant to pay the price, or a failure to execute a small part of the work in the manner stipulated, when the greater part had been performed according to contract, the party is relegated to the quantum meruit.—Morfort v. Martin, 22 Ky. (6. T. B. Mon.) 609, 17 Am. Dec. 168.

[i] (Ky) Where work was not such as the contract prescribed that it should be, and defendant accepted it and used it, he must pay what it was worth to him, not exceeding the reasonable value of the material and labor.—(1887) Farnan v. Lexington Ice Manufactory, 9 Ky. Law Rep. 621; (1891) Lexington Ice Mfg. & Storage Co. v. Farnan, 13 Ky. Law Rep. 270.

[j] (Ky. 1887) Plaintiff undertook to build a house for defendant according to specifications, but the contract did not identify any papers containing the specifications agreed on. Plaintiff and the agent of defendant had agreed on specifications, and the agent delivered to his principal what purported to be a duplicate of the original, which was delivered to plaintiff; but the duplicate did not correspond to the original, because of certain interlineations made in the original, which were not in the copy. Held that, as defendant did not agree to pay the contract price for a house built according to the specifications delivered to the plaintiff, the plaintiff may recover on a quantum meruit.—Wybrant v. Brands, 9 Ky. Law Rep. 682.

[k] (Ky. 1893) Where a person desired to have a house built, and contracted for particular materials, and for the doing of the work in accordance with certain plans, the contractor had no right to substitute other materials and change the plan; and where the contractor has made such change, in arriving at the difference in the value of the house as built and as it should have been built under the contract, the cost of taking out all the work and material which was not done according to the contract, and having it done over, should be ascertained.—Kiel v. Kline, 15 Ky. Law Rep. 158.

[l] (Me. 1839) Where a contract for the construction of a building is abandoned by the parties, and a building is constructed by one of the parties to the contract for the other party and two other persons, the price for the building is not to be ascertained in an action for the work and labor from that fixed in the written contract.—Tebbetts v. Haskins, 16 Me. (4 Shep.) 283.

[m] (Md. 1860) C. agreed with a city to build an arch over D.'s raceway, and afterwards, by agreement between them and the city, the contract price was to be paid by the city to D., who was to have the arch done in a superior manner, and to pay any additional expenses incurred in building it. C. built the arch, and it fell in, either because it was too weak, or because the city contractor, over whom neither C. nor D. had any control, improperly dumped the filling on it. Held, that C. could recover for the value of any of his materials used in rebuilding the arch.—Denmead v. Coburn, 15 Md. 29.

[n] (Mass. 1817) Where a person who has contracted to erect a bridge in a particular manner executes it so unfaithfully that, though it served its intended use for a time, it was finally carried away because of the defect in its structure, he could not recover on a quantum meruit, because the defendant received no benefit from his labors.—Taft v. Inhabitants of Montague, 14 Mass. 282, 7 Am. Dec. 215.

[nn] (Mass. 1828) Plaintiff constructed a house for defendant on a contract, and put in workmanship and materials varying from the contract. Defendant was present and objected at times to parts of the work, but continued to give directions, and ordered some variations from the contract. After the work was done he refused to accept, but plaintiff had no knowledge that he intended to refuse it until after it was finished. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to recover on a quantum meruit for his labor.—Hayward v. Lennon, 24 Mass. (7 Pick.) 181, 19 Am. Dec. 269.

[o] (Mass. 1829) An action may be maintained on an implied promise for labor done under a special contract, which has not been performed in accordance with its terms, where the work performed is of benefit to the defendant.—Smith v. First Congregational Meeting House, 25 Mass. (8 Pick.) 178.

[oo] (Mass. 1851) Where plaintiff agreed to construct a house for defendant, but, the work not being completed at the stipulated time, the defendant directed the plaintiff to discontinue, and the contract was not completed, the plaintiff was entitled to recover on common counts for work and labor, deducting all damages to defendant from the failure to comply with the contract.—Bassett v. Sanborn, 63 Mass. (9 Cush.) 58.

[p] (Mass. 1860) Where plaintiff agreed with a town to build a road in accordance with the order of the county commissioners and to the acceptance of the commissioners, and left the road without willful default, believing it to be completed as required by his agreement, he was entitled to recover from the town the fair value to it of his labors and materials.—Walker v. Inhabitants of Orange, 82 Mass. (16 Gray) 193.

[pp] (Mass. 1865) Where labor has been performed in the erection of a building under a written promise to pay a certain sum therefor, provided the roof does not leak around the belfry and that the plastering on the church proves not to be injured by frost, the acceptance of such written promise will not prevent a recovery for the value of the labor on a quantum meruit.—Thompson v. Purcell, 92 Mass. (10 Allen) 426.

[q] (Mass. 1865) Commissioners appointed to partition realty may recover, if they act faithfully, full compensation for their services, though in making such partition they innocently departed from and acted in violation of the directions of the warrant under which they acted, and their report was not accepted and partition was not made, and their charges and expenses were not allowed by the judge appointing them.—Potter v. Hazard, 93 Mass. (11 Allen) 187.

[qq] (Mass. 1867) Where a contract is made for certain work to be done to the acceptance of the county commissioners, and the commissioners fail to accept the work, the plaintiff on a quantum meruit may recover such sum as the benefit of the work he has done in compliance with the terms of the contract is reasonably worth to the defendant, not exceeding the contract price.—Atkins v. Barnstable County, 97 Mass. 428.

[r] (Mass. 1872) Where a person who has contracted to grade certain land in a certain manner has honestly endeavored to fulfill the contract, and has substantially done so with substantial benefit to the landowner, he may recover what his work is fairly worth, though he has failed to fulfill the contract in some particulars.—Powell v. Howard, 109 Mass. 192.

[rr] (Mass. 1873) A plaintiff may recover under a count on an account annexed for work done in building a house under a special contract, which he has substantially performed.—Cullen v. Sears, 112 Mass. 299.

[s] (Miss. 1843) If A. undertakes to do a piece of work in a workmanlike manner, and "as well as any other mechanic could," and the work, when completed, will not answer the purpose for which it was designed, he cannot recover in an action for work and labor done.—Lefiore v. Justice, 9 Miss. (1 Smedes & M.) 381.

[ss] (Mo. 1821) Where plaintiff produced a covenant for work to be done in a particular manner, to be completed by a certain day, and to be paid for in property at a fixed price, and it appeared that the work was not done according to the time contracted for, the plaintiff might recover on a quantum meruit.—Labeaume v. Hill, 1 Mo. 42.

[t] (Mo. 1857) Where a person agrees to construct a road, and fails to complete it in the manner prescribed in the contract, he can only recover, if at all, on a quantum meruit.—Barcus v. Hannibal, R. C. & P. Plank Road Co., 26 Mo. 102.

[tt] (Mo. 1895) A building contractor must show a substantial compliance with the terms of the special contract before he can recover for work done and materials furnished thereunder; but he may recover on a quantum meruit if his services and the improvements made are of some value to the owner who retains and uses them, even though they are not in strict compliance with the terms of the contract.—Freeman v. Ayler, 62 Mo. App. 613, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 582.

[u] (N. H. 1832) W. agreed with the town of S. to make a highway in a particular manner, for which he was to receive a certain price. He made the highway, but not according to contract. Held, that he might recover on a quantum meruit count as much as his labor had been worth to the town.—Wadleigh v. Town of Sutton, 6 N. H. 15, 23 Am. Dec. 704.

[uu] (N. Y. 1830) Where one party is prevented by the other from performing a contract for labor within the time stipulated by his agreement, and afterwards does the work agreed on, but at an enhanced expense, he may sue for indemnity in a general count, and need not bring his action on the agreement.—Dubois v. Delaware & H. Canal Co., 4 Wend. 285.

[v] (N. Y. 1837) Where work done under a special agreement is not finished at the time agreed, but is proceeded in afterwards, with the assent of him for whom it is done, indebitatus assumpsit lies for the work done; but the plaintiff is confined to the agreed rate of compensation, when neither party is the faulty cause of the delay, if no intimation were given during the progress of the work that a different rate would be insisted on.—Merrill v. Ithaca & O. R. Co., 16 Wend. 586, 30 Am. Dec. 130.

[vv] (N. Y. 1840) Indebitatus assumpsit lies for work done, though under a special contract, where it was not done within the time or in the manner specified, if it was done with the approbation of the defendant.—Ladue v. Seymour, 24 Wend. 60.

[w] (N. Y. 1853) Where plaintiff contracted to erect a building, and constructed it in so unskillful a manner that it could not be made safe without rebuilding a considerable portion of it, he was not entitled to recover compensation for the work performed by him.—Pullman v. Corning, 9 N. Y. (5 Seld.) 93, 14 Barb. 174.

[ww] (N. Y. 1875) Where a contract requires that the work shall be completed on a certain date and paid for at completion, and it is not completed within the time limited for its performance, but is proceeded with afterwards with the assent of the party for whom it is being done, a recovery may be had for the work done according to the rate of compensation fixed by the contract.—Dillon v. Masterton, 39 N. Y. Super. Ct. (7 Jones & S.) 133.

[x] (N. Y. 1876) Where work has not been done according to the plans, any injurious departure therefrom will affect the quantum of recovery, but will not prevent recovery for what the services were worth.—Payne v. Hodge, 7 Hun, 612, 71 N. Y. 598.

[xx] (Ohio, 1883) One who paints another's house, but not in a proper manner, under an agreement that he is to receive therefor a stated sum if he paints the house in a proper manner, and half that sum if not, cannot recover on a quantum meruit against the owner, who has paid him half the amount as agreed.—Ginther v. Shultz, 40 Ohio St. 104.

[y] (Or. 1879) Where one performs services under a special contract, but full compliance therewith becomes impracticable, and the service has been of value to the party for whom it was rendered, the party performing it may recover for his services.—Steeples v. Newton, 7 Or. 110, 33 Am. Rep. 705.

[yy] (Pa. 1859) If a mechanic fails to comply with his agreement in making a structure, and furnishes weak or worthless materials, he cannot recover for his labor by showing that the plan under which he was to do the work was defective, and that the structure would have been of no value had he performed according to the agreement.—Loundsberry v. Eastwick, 3 Phila. 371.

[z] (Vt. 1836) Where labor is performed on land under a special contract, but not strictly according to the terms of the contract, the party performing it may recover only what the labor is worth.—Dyer v. Jones, 8 Vt. 205.

[zz] (Vt. 1839) In contracts for labor, where the plaintiff is not guilty of a willful deviation from the terms of the contract, but fails to fulfill them, and has performed work beneficial to the defendant, he is entitled to recover under the general counts for work and labor.—Blood v. Enos, 12 Vt. 625, 36 Am. Dec. 363.

§ 28. Performance of additional or extra work.

Effect of modification of contract, see ante, § 24.
Extra work caused by modification of contract, see ante, § 24.
Compensation for extra work under contract in general, see "Contracts," vol. 11, cc. 1183–1207, §§ 1071–1097.

[a] (Ala. 1847) Where a sealed contract is executed for building a house, and additional work is done, for which no price is agreed on, a quantum meruit will lie for the work so added.—Aikin v. Bloodgood, 12 Ala. 221.

[b] (Ala. 1853) Where a written contract for the building of a house is subsequently varied by the parties, so as to require a greater amount of work and materials, as well as an alteration in the structure and a longer time for its completion, the workmen may recover on a quantum meruit for work and labor.—Hutchison v. Cullum, 23 Ala. 622.

[c] (Ala. 1891) Where a building contract provides that no extra work shall be paid for, unless a separate estimate in writing shall have been submitted prior thereto, the contractors can recover for extra work furnished under a promise by the owner to pay therefor.—Davis v. Badders, 95 Ala. 348, 10 South. 422.

[d] (Del. 1855) Services in the way of assiduous nursing and attention to a boarder, if performed with the intention of charging additionally for them, furnish a ground of action.—Kennard v. Whitson, 1 Houst. 36.

[e] (Ga. 1886) One who orders another to cut off a hydrant cannot be required to pay for other and additional work done, but not ordered.—Vason v. Strauss, 75 Ga. 833.

[f] (Ill. 1869) Where a mechanic agreed to do certain work on the representation of a person for whom the work was to be done as to the character of the work, and did not personally examine into the character of the work to be done, but sent his man to execute it, the want of notice, before proceeding with the labor, that it was more expensive than represented, would not prejudice the mechanic's right to recover, in an action for the work performed, the actual value of the work done in excess of the price agreed on.—Martine v. Nelson, 51 Ill. 422.

[g] (Ill. 1878) Where a contractor agreed to erect a building for defendant, under a contract which contemplated employment of other persons, and the part of the work proving defective was taken out, and replaced by a person who had been working for the contractor, the defendant was not liable to such person for the work merely because defendant saw him at work and made no objection, but told him to hurry the work, supposing it done under and for the contractor.—Campbell v. Day, 90 Ill. 363.

[h] (Ind. 1891) Where, after part performance, the parties disagree as to a contract, and defendants refuse to pay for the work unless plaintiff performs it according to their interpretation, plaintiff, after the work is accepted, can recover on a quantum meruit for the additional work.—Gastlin v. Weeks, 2 Ind. App. 222, 28 N. E. 331.

[i] (Ky. 1822) Where a carpenter agrees to erect a building for a specified sum, but additions are made by consent, he is entitled to recover for work and labor performed only for the excess.—Wright v. Wright, 11 Ky. (1 Litt.) 179.

[j] (Ky. 1873) Where a contract stipulates that no work shall be considered extra, unless ordered in writing and indorsed by the architect, and extra work is done at the instance of the owner, from which a benefit is derived, it must be regarded as an independent contract, for which a recovery may be had.—Escott v. White, 73 Ky. (10 Bush) 169.

[k] (La.) One who permits materials to be furnished for and work to be done on his premises, though not included in a contract for other work done at the same time, must pay for the benefit received.—(1841) Giraghty v. Saulet, 18 La. 539; (1844) Hillman v. Cage, 6 Rob. 499.

[l] (Md. 1874) Where a plaintiff renders services in addition to those contemplated in a special contract, the jury, in an action therefor, may infer an agreement to pay for them.—Spencer v. Trafford, 42 Md. 1.

[m] (Mass. 1832) Where the work proved much greater than plaintiff had estimated, and he received the whole contract price during the time he worked, but failed to complete the contract, held, that he could have no further claim on a quantum meruit.—Phelps v. Sheldon, 30 Mass. (13 Pick.) 50, 23 Am. Dec. 659.

[n] (Mo. 1845) Where defendants, having a contract for the erection of a building, sublet it to the plaintiffs, who undertook to perform the work in the same manner that the defendants had stipulated to do it, the defendants cannot be subjected to a charge for additional compensation without an agreement to pay therefor, as the law will not imply a promise by them to pay therefor, as no benefit resulted to them.—Medlin v. Brooks, 9 Mo. 106.

[o] (Mo. 1850) Indebitatus assumpsit lies to recover for extra work not embraced in a special contract, and done upon the subject of that contract, although the special contract has not been wholly executed.—Powell v. Buckley, 13 Mo. 317.

[p, q] (N. Y. 1864) An action by a servant to recover extra compensation under an agreement with defendant's agent, whose acts, to be valid, were subject to the approval of defendant's general agent, cannot be maintained, where plaintiff, though notified by the general agent of the disapproval of such contract, continued in the employment on the terms proposed by defendant and accepted his monthly wages.—McGovern v. Western R. Co., 28 How. Prac. 493.

[r] (N. Y. 1888) Where defendant had stated that there would be changes in the plans, on which plaintiff's estimates for certain work were based, and that he need not estimate beyond a certain amount of materials, held, that plaintiff could recover on a quantum meruit for additional materials.—Isaacs v. Smith, 55 N. Y. Super. Ct. (23 Jones & S.) 446.

[s] (Pa. 1836) An apprentice cannot maintain an action against his master to recover compensation for extra work done by him during his apprenticeship, though the work was done under a promise to pay for it.—Bailey v. King, 1 Whart. 113, 29 Am. Dec. 42.

[t] (Pa. 1857) Where a person agrees to perform certain services for a definite period at a stipulated salary, and continues the service beyond the period agreed on, in the absence of any new contract, the presumption is that he continued under the same contract.—Wallace v. Floyd, 29 Pa. (5 Casey) 184, 72 Am. Dec. 620.

[u] (Pa. 1883) Where a person continues in an employment after the expiration of the term, and the nature of the services is greatly changed from that which the parties had in view when the hiring took place, compensation can be recovered on a quantum meruit.—In re Gochamer's Estate, 5 Lanc. Law Rev. 224.

[v] (Pa. 1888) A claim for services rendered to a decedent in his lifetime over and above the contract with decedent can only be successfully made by proving an independent agreement for such compensation.—In re Robinson's Estate, 45 Leg. Int. 226.

[w] (S. C. 1821) A workman, employed to do a particular job, who adds extra work without consulting his employer, cannot recover for such extra work.—Hort v. Norton, 1 McCord, 22.

[x] (Tex. 1892) The expense of the time and services of the president of a corporation which had agreed to erect an ice plant for defendant, given after the completion of the contract, at the request of the other party to the contract, is a proper charge against him.—Alamo Mills Co. v. Hercules Iron Works, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 683, 22 S. W. 1097.

§ 29. Rescission or breach of contract by employer in general.

See post, § 31 [a].

[a] (Ala. 1845) Plaintiff agreed with defendant for a reward dependent on his success to attend at Washington and do certain things in reference to a controversy about a private land claim pending before congress between defendant and another. Plaintiff attended two sessions of congress, when the matter was compromised between defendant and the other party. Held that, if plaintiff was not privy to the compromise, he could not be required to prove that he could have performed his undertaking, as that had been rendered impossible by the act of defendant; and if plaintiff assented to the compromise, and did not abandon his claim for services rendered, the law would imply a promise from defendant to pay the value of the services, to be admeasured by the contract, not to exceed the stipulated amount.—Hunt v. Test, 8 Ala. 713, 42 Am. Dec. 659

[b] (Ill. 1859) Where plaintiff has suffered damages by breach of a contract over and above the price of the work fixed by it, he may recover for such breach; but that cannot influence the price he shall recover for the work he has actually done.—Folliott v. Hunt, 21 Ill. (11 Peck) 654.

[c] (Ill. 1872) Where a contract for certain work provided that for certain causes the defendant might declare it forfeited, in which event defendant was to be exonerated from all liability, and the contract was terminated improperly, plaintiff was entitled to recover in an action for work done outside of the contract by the defendant's direction.—Sanger v. City of Chicago, 65 Ill. 506.

[d] (Ind. 1892) Defendant's intestate agreed, if plaintiff would take care of him and his house and property, to convey to her his farm at the end of a year. Plaintiff performed her part of the contract, but deceased died before the end of the year without having made the conveyance. Held, that plaintiff could recover on a quantum meruit for services rendered in pursuance of the contract.—Smith v. Lotton, 5 Ind. App. 177, 31 N. E. 816.

[e] (Md. 1855) Where a special contract to pay a certain sum for services provides that the defendant may dismiss the plaintiff at any time during the year on giving a month's notice, and the latter is dismissed, the plaintiff must recover on the contract, and cannot resort to a quantum meruit.—Jenkins v. Long, 8 Md. 132.

[f] (Mass. 1826) Plaintiff agreed that his minor son should work for defendant nine months, defendant to give him therefor certain chattels, which were delivered forthwith, but were to remain the property of defendant until the services were performed. Plaintiff sold the chattels to a stranger, and the boy was afterwards wrongfully discharged by defendant before the expiration of the term. Held, that there was a rescission of the written contract, entitling plaintiff to recover on a quantum meruit for the services performed.—Hill v. Green, 21 Mass. (4 Pick.) 114.

[g] (Mass. 1865) Where plaintiff was ready to perform his duties as a minister during the whole time for which he was settled, and he was prevented from performing them by the act of the defendants, he could sue on an account annexed; nothing remaining to be done under the contract but the payment of the money.—Johnson v. Trinity Church Soc., 93 Mass. (11 Allen) 123.

[h] (N. J. 1859) Where, under an indebitatus count for services performed, it appears that the plaintiff has been legally discharged and has not performed the services for which he claims compensation, he cannot recover.—Bernard v. City of Hoboken, 27 N. J. Law (3 Dutch.) 412.

[i] (N. Y. 1860) Where a party contracts to work for another for a certain time, and is discharged by his employer, he may treat the contract as rescinded, and immediately sue on a quantum meruit for the work actually performed.—Colburn v. Woodworth, 31 Barb. 381.

[j] (Pa. 1884) A person who is discharged from employment without cause, and prevented from performing his contract, cannot recover on the common counts for the time he was prevented from working, as the declarations should set out the special agreement, with an averment of the plaintiff's readiness to perform, as an excuse for want of performance.—McQuicken v. Timony, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 249.

§ 30. Breach of contract by employer after completion of work.

See ante, § 25 [h].

Nature and form of remedy for recovery of compensation on performance in general, see ante, § 23½.

[a] (Ala. 1843) If a contract is entered into for the purpose of professional services, the value of which is to be ascertained by arbitration, and the party for whom they are rendered refuses to have them arbitrated, assumpsit will lie for a quantum meruit.—Bank of State v. Martin, 4 Ala. 615.

[b] (Ga. 1859) Where A. sold land to B., to be paid for in work, which B. presently performed, if A. refuses to convey, B. can recover pay for his work.—Leach v. Rogers, 28 Ga. 247.

[c] (Ill. 1893) Where a person employs an architect to make sketches for a proposed building, it being understood that plans and specifications in accordance therewith will be drawn, if the sketches are satisfactory, and such person makes no objection to the sketches, he is liable for what the work is reasonably worth, even though he never constructs the building.—Waggeman v. Richardson, 47 Ill. App. 219.

[d] (Mass. 1838) Plaintiff at defendant's request prepared certain building plans, and defendant's builder, by his direction, took the plans to make an estimate of the cost of the building, made an estimate of them, and delivered them to the defendant. The defendant concluded not to build by such plans, and plaintiff sued for the labor performed in preparing the designs. Held that, the plans having been delivered to the defendant, plaintiff was entitled to recover compensation for the services. —Kutts v. Pelby, 37 Mass. (20 Pick.) 65.

[e] (Mass. 1867) One performing work for the benefit of the county under a contract requiring the acceptance of the commissioners may, on a quantum meruit count, recover the reasonable value of the work, not exceeding the contract price, where the commissioners refuse acceptance.—Atkins v. Barnstable County, 97 Mass. 428.

[f] (Mich. 1888) Where, by a written contract, one party agrees to furnish to the other monthly estimates of the amount of his work, and, when the whole is completed, to furnish a final estimate of the whole work, and fails to furnish estimates for the last two months' work, or to make any final estimate at all, such neglect is a failure to perform which will warrant the other in disregarding the contract, and suing on a quantum meruit.—Bush v. Brooks, 70 Mich. 446, 38 N. W. 562.

[g] (Minn. 1858) In an action on quantum meruit for services rendered, it appeared that they were rendered under a special contract, by which plaintiff was to render the service, to be paid for by defendant by furnishing her a room and board, and that he had failed to comply with his part of the contract during a portion of the time while such services were being rendered. Held, that the plaintiff, not having rescinded upon failure of defendant to perform, had no remedy upon a quantum meruit, but should have sued upon the special contract.—Bond v. Corbett, 2 Minn. 248 (Gil. 209).

[h] (Minn. 1886) Plaintiffs having performed services for defendant under a special agreement that they should receive therefor an annual pass over the defendant's road, and defendant having then refused to give the pass, plaintiffs may recover upon the quantum meruit for their services; the value of such a pass being deemed to be impossible of proof, or of estimation as a measure of damages.—Brown v. St. Paul, M. & M. Ry. Co., 36 Minn. 236, 31 N. W. 941.

[i] (N. Y. 1833) Where a special contract is entered into in respect to work, and the work is performed, the party entitled to compensation may recover under the common counts, though the evidence does not support any special count in the declaration setting forth the contract.—Feeter v. Heath, 11 Wend. 477.

[j] (N. Y. 1864) Where services are rendered pursuant to an understanding that compensation shall be made by will, and the party receiving the services dies without making the compensation, the party rendering them is entitled to compensation out of the estate for the value of the services.—Robinson v. Raynor, 28 N. Y. 494.

[k] (Pa. 1845) Where labor has been performed under an agreement to be paid by the employer's note, and there has been a refusal to deliver the note at the time specified in the agreement, the laborer may maintain a special assumpsit, for not delivering the note, immediately on the refusal.—Huston v. Mehaffey, 2 Clark, 525.

[l] (Tex. 1876) One who labors on property under an agreement with the owner that he shall be compensated out of the proceeds of the property when sold, the object of the labor being to enhance the salable value, may, on the owner's withdrawal of the property from sale, recover a reasonable compensation for his labor. —Fayette County v. Faisin's Ex'r, 44 Tex. 585.

[m] (Vt. 1860) Defendant agreed with plaintiffs that, if the latter would build one-half of the division fence between them, he would build the other half, or pay the plaintiffs for one-half of the fence which they should build. Plaintiffs built one-half of the fence, but defendant neglected to build any portion of the other half. Held, that plaintiffs could recover half the expense of the fence built by them, under the general counts in assumpsit for work, labor, and materials furnished.—Strong v. Slicer, 33 Vt. 466.

[n] (Va. 1858) An agreement between a railroad company and a contractor provided that the amount of work done was to be determined, without right of appeal, by the estimate of the engineer of the company. The engineer returned an estimate which was false and fraudulent. Held that, such estimate not being within the terms of the contract, the contractor was entitled to recover generally in assumpsit for the value of the work.—Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Polly, 14 Grat. 447; Same v. Laffertys, Id. 478.

[o] (Wis. 1886) Where labor is performed under a contract that it is to be paid for by a conveyance of land, and the employer afterwards refuses to convey, the employé's action is on the special contract, and an action will not lie on the common count for work and labor. —Cameron v. Austin, 65 Wis. 652, 27 N. W. 622.

§ 31. Partial performance of contract.

Allegation as to partial performance of contract, see post, § 41 [uu].

Performance of extra work on contract not fully executed, see ante, § 28.

Rate of compensation for partial performance of contract, see "Contracts," vol. 11, cc. 1813–1815, § 1507.

Rights and liabilities on partial performance of contract for services, see "Contracts," vol. 11, cc. 1779–1815, §§ 1493–1507.

[a] Where an express contract under which services are rendered is rescinded before completion, an action may be brought on a quantum meruit.

—(Md. 1843) Howard v. Wilmington & S. R. Co., 1 Gill, 311;

(Mass. 1882) Simmons v. Lawrence Duck Co., 133 Mass. 298;

(Minn. 1870) Marcotte v. Beaupre, 15 Minn. 152 (Gil. 117).

[b] (U. S. 1886) Where a contractor agrees to erect a building, to be paid for as the work progresses, on certificates signed by the supervising architect, and the architect fraudulently refuses to sign a certificate, and the contractor is unable to finish the building, he may recover of the owner on a quantum meruit for the work actually done, although there was no collusion between the architect and such owner. —Batchelor v. Kirkbride (C. C.) 26 Fed. 899.

[c] (Ala. 1842) Where a person agrees to serve another as an overseer for a year, and the overseer dies during the year, his personal representatives cannot recover, in an action for work and labor, a pro rata compensation for the time he serves.—Givham v. Dailey's Adm'x, 4 Ala. 336.

[d] (Ala. 1845) Plaintiff repaired defendant's gin under an agreement that plaintiff should have as compensation all he could obtain for the gin above $50. After he had retained the gin for some time without selling it, he surrendered it to defendant, who demanded it or $50, saying, "if you do not give me one or the other, we will have to settle it some other way." Held, that defendant's reception and retention of the gin must be deemed to have been with mutual assent, and plaintiff could not recover for the repairs, unless it was shown that defendant sold, or might have sold, it for more than said sum.—Hayden v. Boyd, 8 Ala. 323.

[e] (Ala. 1891) Where a contract for a building is not entirely performed, but the owner moves in before completion, and remains in possession after it is finished, he is liable for the labor and materials on an implied contract.—Davis v. Badders, 95 Ala. 348, 10 South. 422.

[f] (Conn. 1849) Where defendant engaged plaintiff to make a particular article for him out of materials furnished, and during the progress of the work and before it had assumed the character contracted for the work was stopped, plaintiff cannot maintain against defendant a general action for work and labor done and materials furnished; his remedy being a special action for refusing to accept the article.—Allen v. Jarvis, 20 Conn. 38.

[g] (Ill. 1871) In an action under the common counts to recover for work done by plaintiff for defendant, it appeared there was a special contract in writing for the performance of the work, and the work had been only partially completed. There was no abandonment of the contract by mutual consent, and no rescission thereof by any act of defendant. Held, that the rights of plaintiff should be determined by the contract alone. He could not recover under the common counts the price of the work already performed. The mere facts that the parties had had an accounting, showing the amount due plaintiff, and that defendant expressed an intention to send plaintiff some money, were not enough to warrant an action for the amount thus found due.—Phelps v. Hubbard, 59 Ill. 79.

[h] (Ill. 1871) Where there has been only part performance of a contract, and the remainder has been waived or prevented, and the work performed has been accepted, a recovery may be had for the contract price of the service performed under an indebitatus assumpsit.—Catholic Bishop of Chicago v. Bauer, 62 Ill. 188.

[i] (Ill. 1888) A recovery cannot be had, under the common counts in assumpsit for work and labor, of the contract price for sinking a well under a special contract, until such contract has been fully performed.—Wilderman v. Pitts, 29 Ill. App. 528.

[j] (Ky. 1887) Where a party has performed a part of his contract, but has failed to perform the residue, he is not in all cases without a remedy; for, though he can have no remedy on the contract as originally made, the circumstances may be such that the law will raise a new contract and give him a remedy on quantum meruit.—Tandy's Assignee v. Hatcher, 9 Ky. Law Rep. 150.

[k] (Mass. 1832) Where a person undertakes to perform an entire work at a stipulated price, and fails to perform it, but receives the whole contract price, he can have no further claim on the ground of quantum meruit, though the work performed is beneficial to the other party.—Phelps v. Sheldon, 30 Mass. (13 Pick.) 50, 23 Am. Dec. 659.

[l] (Mass. 1841) Where an entire contract is made for labor on a large number of articles in the process of manufacture, to be paid for when finished, the owner cannot be held as trustee of the labor until the work is performed on all the articles, as no pro rata wages were earned on the contract.—Robinson v. Hall, 44 Mass. (3 Metc.) 301.

[m] (Mass. 1846) Plaintiff agreed to work for defendant, and that, if he should be dissatisfied and wish to leave the service, he would give defendant notice and work for him four weeks after the notice. After plaintiff had begun to work he became sick and unable to work, and left defendant without giving notice, and remained sick for some time. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to recover a proper compensation for the work which he had done, as the notice required applied to a voluntary leaving of the service, and not to leaving because of sickness.—Fuller v. Brown, 52 Mass. (11 Metc.) 440.

[n] (Mass. 1854) Where the owner entered and occupied a house, which was nearly completed when it was destroyed, the workman was entitled to recover for the work done when the owner took possession, in an action for labor performed.—Lord v. Wheeler, 67 Mass. (1 Gray) 282.

[o] (Mass. 1876) Where a building was destroyed without the plaintiff's fault, so that he could not complete his contract, he was entitled to recover under a count for work and materials furnished.—Cleary v. Sohier, 120 Mass. 210.

[p] (Mass. 1887) In a suit for the services of plaintiff's minor son, defendant, a dentist, set up an oral contract with plaintiff that the son should go to work for two years in defendant's office, and receive instruction, etc., defendant to instruct him, and at the end of the two years pay his tuition fees at a dental college. The son worked for defendant in his office for about a year, remained away about seven months, on account of illness, and continued on under the agreement for two months more, when the agreement was abandoned, and he was paid three dollars per week for some weeks, both being done at his request. Held that plaintiff might recover upon quantum meruit, notwithstanding the contract.—Freeman v. Foss, 145 Mass. 361, 14 N. E. 141, 1 Am. St. Rep. 467.

[q] (Mo. 1835) Where work is done under a special agreement, the agreement must be complied with before the party can recover, whether all the work be done, or only a portion of it.—Helm v. Wilson, 4 Mo. 41, 28 Am. Dec. 336.

[r] (Mo. 1845) A person who is prevented by the other party from completing a contract is entitled to recover as if the contract were completed, and cannot abandon it and sue on a quantum meruit.—Little v. Mercer, 9 Mo. 218.

[s] (Mo. 1849) Defendant promised plaintiff, who was going abroad for his family, that, if he would bring with him defendant's son, who lived some distance from where plaintiff's family resided, he would pay him a certain sum, and pay the expenses of the son. Plaintiff went for the boy, but his mother refused to let him leave. Held that, plaintiff being prevented from complying with the contract by the defendant's wife, he could maintain assumpsit for services and work and labor in endeavoring to get the son.—Lemp v. Streiblein, 12 Mo. 456.

[t] (Mo. 1882) One who under a contract is doing woodwork in a building destroyed by fire while under control of the owner may recover on quantum meruit for the work done prior to the time of the fire.—Haynes v. Second Baptist Church of St. Louis, 12 Mo. App. 536.

[u] (Mo. 1886) A contractor cannot recover on a quantum meruit for a part performance of a subsisting and continuing contract.—O'Brien v. Mayer, 23 Mo. App. 648.

[v] (N. Y. 1882) Plaintiff was employed to perform certain work on defendant's premises, and it was to be inspected and accepted before being paid for. Neither the time during which the agreement was to run, nor the amount of the work to be performed under it, was fixed. While the work was in its usual condition, but not accepted, and some unfinished, the premises were destroyed without any fault of plaintiff. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to recover the value of the work he had performed before the premises were destroyed.—Whelan v. Ansonia Clock Co., 27 Hun, 557.

[w] (N. Y. 1884) Plaintiff agreed to varnish clock cases for defendant. Payment was made at stated intervals for work completed and inspected. Defendant's factory burned down with some cases neither finished nor inspected, but on which plaintiff had done work. In an action for work alleged to have been done and performed by plaintiff for defendant, held, that plaintiff could recover for the work done, and upon a quantum meruit for that unfinished, whether he be deemed defendant's servant or a contractor, since defendant was under an implied obligation to furnish cases so that plaintiff could complete his contract.—Whelan v. Ansonia Clock Co., 97 N. Y. 293.

[x] (Ohio, 1844) Where, in a contract to do certain work, it is agreed that it may be abandoned at the discretion of a certain person named, where such discretion is improperly exercised, a percentum of the price which had been retained under the contract until the completion of the work may be recovered on the common counts for work and labor.—Easton v. Pennsylvania & O. Canal Co., 13 Ohio, 79.

[y] (Tenn. 1835) Where the time for the performance of a special contract has expired, and it was partly performed in labor, the person performing the labor may recover of the party benefited so much as he deserves for his labor.—Elliott v. Wilkinson, 16 Tenn. (8 Yerg.) 411.

[z] (Tenn. 1842) Where a special agreement is abandoned, compensation for part performance may be recovered, equal to and limited by the value and extent of the benefit conferred. —Porter v. Woods, 22 Tenn. (3 Humph.) 56, 39 Am. Dec. 153.

[zz] (Wis. 1867) Plaintiff contracted to drill a well for defendant at a certain rate per day, payable on its completion, but by reason of sickness plaintiff was unable to fully perform his contract. Held, that a recovery for the work done could be had on a quantum meruit. —Green v. Gilbert, 21 Wis. 395.

§ 32. —— Breach of contract by employer.

[a] A party who has contracted to perform work for another may recover for work done on a quantum meruit on breach of the contract by such other party and preventing plaintiff from performing his part of the contract.

(Ky. 1850) Rankin v. Darnell, 50 Ky. (11 B. Mon.) 30, 52 Am. Dec. 557.

[b] (Ala. 1854) Where a person contracts to serve another for a year at a stipulated sum, payable monthly, and is discharged without any fault of his own before the expiration of the year, he may consider the contract as rescinded, and sue for unliquidated damages for its breach. —Fowler v. Armour, 24 Ala. 194.

[c] (Ala. 1854) Where an employer discharges a workman on discovering a violation of the contract, and the work is used by the employer and is of value to him, the workman may recover its value on a quantum meruit for work and labor done.—Kirkland v. Oates, 25 Ala. 465.

[d] (Ill. 1872) Where a contract for certain work provided that for certain causes the defendant might declare it forfeited, in which event the defendant was to be exonerated from all liability, and the contract was terminated improperly, plaintiff might recover for all work done under the agreement.—Sanger v. City of Chicago, 65 Ill. 506.

[e] (Ill. 1873) Where plaintiff was employed by defendant for three years, and he performed services under the contract for ten months, when he was discharged without cause, he could recover under the quantum meruit what the services by him and the expenses incurred by him were reasonably worth, and was not bound by the contract as to his compensation.—William Butcher Steel Works v. Atkinson, 68 Ill. 421, 18 Am. Rep. 560.

[f] (Ill. 1883) Where a party was to work up a trade in a certain article, for which he was to have the exclusive right in a certain territory, and after he had bestowed labor in successfully working up an extensive trade the other party refused to comply with his part of the contract, the former was entitled to recover on a quantum meruit the amount expended by him in working up a trade and the value of his time and services.—Frazer v. Howe, 106 Ill. 563.

[g] (Ill. 1888) Where a suit is brought to recover for work done under a special contract, the contract must govern as to the value of the work, notwithstanding the contractor may have been prevented from completing it by the wrongful act of the other party to the contract.— Clark v. Scanlan, 33 Ill. App. 48.

[h] (Ind. 1829) Where one entered upon land under a parol contract for a written lease for seven years, and was to make improvements thereon, and after he had done part of the work the other party refused to execute the lease and expelled him from the land, he could maintain indebitatus assumpsit for the work performed. —Alcorn v. Harmonson, 2 Blackf. 235.

[i] (Ky. 1873) Where defendant completes a contract, and puts it out of the power of the plaintiff to do so, a recovery may be had on a quantum meruit, as if the work had been completed by plaintiff, but not in a workmanlike manner.—Escott v. White, 73 Ky. (10 Bush) 169.

[j] (Me. 1858) Defendant had contracted to sell to plaintiff a house, to be paid for in labor by plaintiff, which plaintiff, with defendant's knowledge and without objection from defendant, put in repair. Plaintiff also performed labor for defendant in payment therefor, and was afterwards prevented from completing the contract through defendant's fault. Held, that since, in such case, plaintiff was entitled to treat the contract as rescinded, he could recover on the common counts.—Wright v. Haskell, 45 Me. 489.

[k] (Md. 1880) Defendant being unable to make payments as the work progressed, the plaintiff retired from the work by defendant's consent, with the understanding that he was to be paid for what he had done. Plaintiff signed an agreement releasing defendant from further liability on the contract. After such paper was signed, the actual amount due plaintiff was ascertained by arbitration, and defendant failed to comply therewith. Held that, the written contract having been abrogated by consent, the matter stood as if the plaintiff had done all he was to do, and was entitled to maintain his action for what he had done.—McLaughlin v. Reinhart, 54 Md. 71.

[l] (Mass. 1823) Where plaintiff has partially performed a parol agreement relating to an interest in land, and the defendant wrongfully expels him from the land, he may recover for the work and labor performed for the defendant.—Kidder v. Hunt, 18 Mass. (1 Pick.) 328, 11 Am. Dec. 183.

[m] (Mass. 1858) Where work is performed according to a special contract after the contract has been terminated by the employer, it cannot be recovered for on quantum meruit without proof of a new engagement.—Hyland v. Giddings, 77 Mass. (11 Gray) 232.

[n] (Mass. 1871) Plaintiff agreed to cultivate defendant's land for two years for a share of the crop, both parties understanding that the crop would be larger the second year than the first. At the end of the first year defendant paid plaintiff his share of that year's crop, and refused to let him cultivate for the second year. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover for work done in cultivating the land.—Williams v. Bemis, 108 Mass. 91, 11 Am. Rep. 318.

[o] (Mass. 1872) Where plaintiff agreed to work for defendants by a contract which provided that, as security for its fulfillment, they might keep back part of his wages until it was fulfilled to their entire satisfaction, and they wrongfully discharged him without any breach of the contract by him, they could not withhold any part of his wages under the pretense that he had not worked to their satisfaction.—Sloan v. Hayden, 110 Mass. 141.

[p] (Mich. 1859) An article was ordered of a manufacturer at a specified price, there being in effect an agreement for a sale, and work was done and materials used towards its construction, but before it was completed the order was countermanded, and the materials remained in the manufacturer's hands. Held, that the manufacturer could not recover on the common counts the value of such labor and materials, but should sue on the special contract, and claim his damages for the breach, as for being wrongfully prevented from performing it.—Hosmer v. Wilson, 7 Mich. 294, 74 Am. Dec. 716.

[q] (Mich. 1876) After one had worked several months for another at the latter's request, his employer agreed to pay him at a certain rate for his services and hire him for a year at the same rate, but shortly afterwards the employer hired another. Held, that the employé could recover the value of his services under a common count in assumpsit, less what had been paid him under the contract, and it was not necessary to bring action on the contract.—McQueen v. Gamble, 33 Mich. 344.

[r] (Mich. 1879) Where one enters upon the performance of a special contract for service, and performs the same, so far as he is able, without co-operation on the part of the defendant, who fails or refuses to perform, recovery can be had upon the common counts for the work done.—Mitchell v. Scott, 41 Mich. 108, 1 N. W. 968.

[s] (Minn. 1871) Where a party to a contract has so acted upon it that he cannot be placed in statu quo, and is prevented by the other party from completing the same, he may sue for work done and materials furnished on quantum meruit and quantum valebant, and refer to the contract as furnishing a basis from which the reasonable value of work and material may be ascertained.—Siebert v. Leonard, 17 Minn. 433 (Gil. 410).

[t] (Mo. 1872) A simple breach of contract will not authorize a person employed to stop work and recover for the unperformed work, but it may justify him in abandoning his contract and entitle him to recover for the work already done.—Fitzgerald v. Hayward, 50 Mo. 516.

[u] (N. Y. 1857) Where a person has been employed under a contract and wrongfully discharged, he can maintain no action for work and labor, unless the work has been actually performed, as his remedy was either an action for damages for the breach of the contract or for the contract price.—Wiseman v. Panama R. Co., 1 Hilt. 300.

[v] (N. Y. 1880) Plaintiff's mother agreed with defendant to furnish money to bring the plaintiff from a foreign country, receive him into his family, and educate him. Defendant furnished the money and received him into his family; but the plaintiff left him after several years, claiming that defendant had not fulfilled the agreement, and sued to recover for his work and labor performed for the defendant. Held that, if the defendant did not comply with the agreement, plaintiff could recover what the services rendered were fairly worth, over and above all that he had received from defendant.—Lind v. Sullestadt, 21 Hun, 364.

[w] (Tex. 1870) A contract provided that plaintiff should give his services, and defendant should furnish machinery and subsistence for workmen, in a joint enterprise of boring oil wells, and that plaintiff should have one-eighth and defendant seven-eighths of the profits. Held, that on a breach of the contract by refusal of defendant to furnish such machinery and subsistence plaintiff could recover on a quantum meruit.—Devoe v. Stewart, 32 Tex. 712.

§ 33. —— Breach of contract by employé.

[a] (Ala. 1834) Where a person, in consideration of work and labor to be performed by another, covenants to convey land to him, and the grantee, ascertaining that he has no title, abandons the contract before its completion, he cannot recover on a common count for the work actually performed.—Reeves v. Wallace, 1 Port. 116.

[b] (Ala. 1842) Where a person engages to serve another for a year, and leaves his employ during the year without his consent, he cannot recover, in an action for work and labor, compensation for the services actually rendered.—Pettigrew v. Bishop, 3 Ala. 440.

[c] (Ala. 1842) Where defendant agreed to employ plaintiff for a year, plaintiff had no right to leave his employ before the expiration of the period, and, if he did so, he was not entitled to recover compensation.—Norris v. Moore, 3 Ala. 676.

[d] (Ala. 1847) Where plaintiff contracted to bore a well at the rate of $1 a foot for the first 500 feet, $2 for the next 100 feet, $5 for the next 100 feet, and $8 per foot for the remaining distance necessary to obtain water, the well to be put in the same finished order as the contractor's best finished wells, and payment to be made on a certain date, plaintiff could not abandon the work so long as it was practicable for him to continue boring and the other party was willing he should continue; and therefore, having discontinued or abandoned the contract, he could not recover for the work done.—Stewart v. Weaver, 12 Ala. 538.

[e] (Ala. 1851) Where a person, after commencing certain work, abandons it before it is finished without sufficient cause, he cannot recover for the work and labor done.—Hawkins v. Gilbert, 19 Ala. 54.

[f] (Ill. 1880) Where a party refuses to perform his contract, or by his act incapacitates himself from performing, such refusal authorizes the other party to recover for his services already performed on a quantum meruit.—Shaffner v. Killian, 7 Ill. App. (7 Bradw.) 620.

[g] (Ky. 1880) Where a building was abandoned before completion, the appropriation of the work of the contractor by the owner imposed a liability to pay for it what it was reasonably worth, and waived the right to object that payment was only to be made on completion of the contract.—Lewis v. Evans, 1 Ky. Law Rep. 349.

[h] (La. 1866) Where a person has hired his services for a fixed period, and leaves his employer before the expiration of the time, he cannot recover wages for the period which he has served without showing that he has a cause of complaint against his employer.—Callehan v. Stafford, 18 La. Ann. 556.

[i] (Mass. 1806) Where a person contracting to perform certain work voluntarily leaves it unfinished, he can have no action against his employer for the part performed.—Faxon v. Mansfield, 2 Mass. 147.

[j] (Mass. 1824) Where an infant made a special agreement to labor for a certain time for certain wages, and before the expiration of the time he voluntarily left his employer, the special contract being avoided, he was entitled to recover on a quantum meruit for the services performed.—Moses v. Stevens, 19 Mass. (2 Pick.) 332.

[k] (Mass. 1837) Where a person, having agreed to work for another for a definite period, voluntarily leaves his service without the consent of the other and without his fault before the expiration of the term, he cannot recover on a quantum meruit for the labor actually performed by him.—Olmstead v. Beale, 36 Mass. (19 Pick.) 528.

[l] (Mass. 1837) Where a minor, after his father's death, enters the service of a ship, and the contract is legally avoided by his desertion of the ship before the completion of the voyage, he may recover on a quantum meruit for the services performed.—Vent v. Osgood, 36 Mass. (19 Pick.) 572.

[m] (Mass. 1847) Where a person agrees to work for another for seven months, and leaves the service without good cause before the time expires, he is not entitled to recover anything for his services.—Davis v. Maxwell, 53 Mass. (12 Metc.) 286.

[n] (Mass. 1872) An infant, who has contracted with manufacturers to work for them for a certain period, can avoid the contract and sue on a quantum meruit for the work and labor performed.—Gaffney v. Hayden, 110 Mass. 137, 14 Am. Rep. 580.

[o] (Mich. 1876) One who, by his contract, is to receive payment in something else than money, cannot, where he has broken his contract, sue upon the quantum meruit, and recover the value of the labor performed under the contract, and thereby convert into cash payments what, according to his agreement, is payable in something else. The express contract is not to be disregarded in such case.—Roberts v. Wilkinson, 34 Mich. 129.

[p] (Pa. 1884) Where a niece left decedent's home and went to her own home, having voluntarily put an end to her contract, compensation for services previously rendered could only be recoverable under a quantum meruit on an implied contract.—In re Heathcote's Estate, 15 Wkly. Notes Cas. 532.

[q] (Tenn. 1854) Where plaintiff contracted to labor on defendant's farm for eight months for a stipulated price, and after laboring part of the time voluntarily abandoned his employer without his consent, he can recover nothing for the time he served.—Hughes v. Cannon, 33 Tenn. (1 Sneed) 622.

[a] (Ala. 1877) The compensation of a probate judge for recording a conveyance is a fee, and not costs, and may be recovered from the party for whom service is rendered in an ordinary action for labor done.—Tillman v. Wood, 58 Ala. 578.

[b] (Del. 1891) One at whose instance another performs services is liable in assumpsit on an implied contract for their reasonable value.—Nichols v. Vinson, 9 Houst. 274, 32 Atl. 225.

[c] (Iowa, 1871) One who performs services, for another at his request, without any agreement or understanding as to the pay, may recover the reasonable value of the same under a quantum meruit.—Rea v. Flathers, 31 Iowa, 545.

[d] (N. J. 1840) Indebitatus assumpsit will not lie for services voluntarily rendered.—Force v. Haines, 17 N. J. Law (2 Har.) 385.

[e, f] (Pa. 1849) A claim for fees earned by a plaintiff's intestate, who was an alderman of Philadelphia, may be recovered in assumpsit for work and labor.—Harris v. Christian, 10 Pa. (10 Barr) 233.

[g] (Vt. 1864) The common count for work and labor and materials furnished is not adapted to a claim for unfinished work not delivered.—Allen v. Thrall, 36 Vt. 711.

§ 35. Conditions precedent.

[a] (Ill. 1880) Where a party, contracting with another for the erection of a house, agrees to accept an order on a third person as a part payment, and was induced to accept such third person by the fraudulent misrepresentations of the debtor, he cannot, on a partial failure of payment by such third person, recover from the original debtor in an action of assumpsit for labor, without returning what he had already received thereon.—Besley v. Dumas, 6 Ill. App. (6 Bradw.) 291.

[b] (Ind. 1823) Where work is done under an oral agreement that the employer shall pay for it by conveying certain land when he should acquire the title thereof, though he is not legally bound to convey the land, yet an action will not lie to recover of him pay for the work, until notice is given to him that the work is completed, and he thereupon fails to convey.—Johnson v. Moore, 1 Blackf. 253.

[c] (N. H. 1855) In an action of assumpsit for services, no notice is required before commencing the suit.—Wilson v. School Dist. No. 4 in Chester, 32 N. H. 118.

[d] (Pa. 1793) Before commencing suit for services of uncertain value, the price therefor should be fixed and demanded of the defendant.—Parr v. Jones, Add. 138.

§ 36. Defenses.

[a] (U. S. 1836) The defendant's male slave, being, by consent of the plaintiff and defendant, at the plaintiff's house, upon a visit to his wife, who was the slave of the plaintiff, was taken suddenly ill of the smallpox, and, after being nursed three weeks by the plaintiff, died at her house. The defendant, as soon as he knew of the sickness of his slave, offered to remove him to his own house, but the plaintiff would not consent to the removal. Held, that the plaintiff could not recover for nursing the slave.—Manning v. Cox, Fed. Cas. No. 9,042 [4 Cranch, C. C. 693].

[b] (Ala. 1838) In an action for work and labor, if the work was so badly done as to be of no value, plaintiff cannot recover even for materials furnished.—Gazzam v. Kirby, 8 Port. 258.

[c] (Ala. 1849) Where an overseer, employed at a stipulated price per annum, was sick a portion of the time, and the employer has been injured by the imperfect performance of the overseer's undertaking, the damages may be recouped, so as to compensate the injury.—Jones v. Deyer, 16 Ala. 221.

[d] (Ark. 1842) In an action for compensation for labor done by plaintiff in building a mill, where defendant proved that the mill, when built, was valueless, held that an offer to do work is a representation by the person offering that he has ability and skill sufficient to do it, and raises an implied agreement to do it in a workmanlike manner, and it is not necessary that he should covenant expressly to use such skill, and plaintiff is not entitled to recover where he failed to do the work in a workmanlike manner.—McDonald v. Simpson, 4 Ark. (4 Pike) 523, 38 Am. Dec. 45.

[e] (Ky. 1840) A mechanic, who constructed a cylinder according to the directions of his employer in a skillful and workmanlike manner, is entitled to a reasonable reward for his labor, though the cylinder wholly failed to perform its intended office.—Ricketts v. Sisson, 39 Ky. (9 Dana) 358, 35 Am. Dec. 141.

[f] (La. 1871) The fact that the nurse or housekeeper lived with the man she was nursing as his concubine does not impair her claim for remuneration, unless, perhaps, where it be shown that concubinage was the motive and cause of their living together in the first instance, and that the services rendered were merely incidental to that mode of living.—Succession of Pereuilhet, 23 La. Ann. 294, 8 Am. Rep. 595.

[g] (Md. 1850) Where plaintiff has performed a part of a special contract according to its terms, and is prevented by defendant from performing the residue, defendant cannot set up a special contract to defeat a recovery for the work actually done.—Rodemer v. Gonder, 9 Gill, 288.

[h] (Mass. 1855) Under the statute of frauds, providing that no action shall be brought on an oral agreement not to be performed within a year from the making thereof, such an agreement for services cannot be said to be any defense to an action on a quantum meruit for services performed under it.—King v. Welcome, 71 Mass. (5 Gray) 41.

[i] (Mass. 1878) To an action on the quantum meruit by the keeper of attached property against the officer employing him, it is no defense that the officer has no claim against another for the performance of the services. The compensation is determined by the value of the services, and not by the amount of benefit, which the officer receives.—Stowe v. Buttrick, 125 Mass. 449.

[j] (Mass. 1883) A manufacturer of machines for one who is required by the contract to pay for their manufacture is not deprived of the right to maintain an action for the repairs of machines which are returned and repaired after being delivered to purchasers by the mere fact that such repairs are made after the termination of the contract under which they were manufactured.—Boston & F. Iron Works v. Montague, 135 Mass. 319.

[k] (Mich. 1876) In an action under a common count for services rendered, a defendant is not at liberty, for the purpose of turning the plaintiff out of court, to set up and claim the benefit of an express contract, which he concedes he refused to regard and expressly repudiated.—McQueen v. Gamble, 33 Mich. 344.

[l] (Mich. 1883) One who was sued for work and labor done on his sawmill claimed recoupment for the breach by plaintiff of an alleged contract of warranty of a certain sawdust elevator to be put into the mill. It appeared that defendant had suggested to plaintiff the use of a Garland chain, and plaintiff had replied that he could put in a bevel gear that would work better; that he proceeded with the manufacture of the shafting, pulley, and gearing, and other machinery, pertaining to the elevator, but delivered it at his own shop to defendant, who put it up himself, though he repeatedly warned plaintiff that, if it did not work well, plaintiff would be responsible. Held, that this did not tend to prove the contract alleged in the claim of recoupment.—Hudnett v. Comstock, 50 Mich. 596, 16 N. W. 157.

[m] (Mo. 1887) One who agrees to make certain articles out of the employer's materials, each to be paid for at a certain price, when finished, cannot recover on a quantum meruit for work done on such of the articles as he left in an unfinished condition.—Gruetzner v. Aude Furniture Co., 28 Mo. App. 263.

[n] (N. Y. 1840) Where plaintiff in assumpsit relies on the common counts for work done, and it appears that there was a written contract, damages to defendant from the want of strict performance on the part of plaintiff may be set up.—Ladue v. Seymour, 24 Wend. 60.

[o] (N. Y. 1842) A person who has served another in expectation of a testamentary provision, and to whom the testator subsequently devises a portion of his estate, cannot maintain a suit for such services against the executors.—Eaton v. Benton, 2 Hill, 576.

[p] (N. Y. 1855) Where an employer expected and agreed to render an equivalent for services, it is no answer for him to say that he agreed to pay some person who has no legal claim to the service or the compensation, especially unless he shows that he has paid that person.—Lewis v. Trickey, 20 Barb. 387.

[q] (N. Y. 1878) In an action by an attorney for alleged services, it is a good defense that the part taken by plaintiff was simply as a friend, and not as a retained attorney or legal adviser; that there was a mutual interchange between plaintiff and defendant of kindly offices, without expectation of payment; and that plaintiff did receive from defendant benefits, advantages, accommodations, and loans and room at reduced prices, and services, which were the consideration for the services rendered by plaintiff without charge.—Young v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 604.

[r] (N. Y. 1878) Where one has manufactured goods under a contract with another, and has shipped them to the latter according to his request, the loss of the goods in transit is no defense to an action for the labor and materials used in their manufacture, unless such loss resulted from the negligence of the plaintiff.—Higgins v. Murray, 73 N. Y. 252.

[s] (Ohio, 1878) Where defendant agreed with plaintiff to credit plaintiff's work and materials on notes which defendant held against plaintiff, but refused to comply therewith, plaintiff may maintain an action against defendant for such work and materials, and defendant cannot set up that the work and materials constituted a payment of the notes pro tanto.—Wisner v. Engel, 1 Cleve. Law Rep. 18, 4 Ohio Dec. 91.

[t] (Pa. 1848) The overseers of the poor of a town cannot recover on quantum meruit compensation for the services of a negro during the time he was held in servitude by the defendant, it not appearing that defendant knew that she was entitled to her freedom.—Overseers v. Cline, 9 Pa. (9 Barr) 217.

[u] (R. I. 1887) One who has assumed a contract between plaintiff and another, and afterwards rescinded it, while plaintiff was ready to perform, cannot set up the contract to defeat an action for work and labor.—Duggan v. McCarthy, 13 Atl. 400.

[v] (S. C. 1868) In an action for work and labor, it is a good defense to show that the work has been so carelessly and wrongly done that the employer is injured by it, and that it is necessary that it should be done over again.—Ervin v. Epps, 15 Rich. Law, 223.

[w] (Tenn. 1842) Where plaintiff sues to recover for work and labor performed, and defendant has been damaged by plaintiff's nonperformance of his part of the agreement, such damage may be offset against plaintiff's verdict.—Whitaker v. Pullen, 22 Tenn. (3 Humph.) 466.

[x] (Tex. 1858) If a surveyor surveys land pointed out by the owner of the certificate, both believing the land to be within the surveyor's district, the fact that it is not does not deprive him of his right to compensation.—McCulloch v. Twitty, 22 Tex. 70.

[y] (Wis. 1854) Defendant may always show want of benefit in defense to an action for services, and, if it be total, he will entitle himself to a verdict.—Cole v. Clarke, 3 Wis. 323.

[z] (Wis. 1854) The implied promise, which supports a quantum meruit count for work and labor, rests on the benefit received thereby by the defendant. Mere labor and mechanical skill will not entitle a plaintiff to recover, if, through his want of judgment or experience, no benefit has resulted to the defendant thereby.—Cole v. Clarke, 3 Wis. 323.

[zz] (Wis. 1879) The fact that plaintiff was negligent and unskillful in his employment will not prevent his recovering what his services were really worth.—McCormick v. Ketchum, 48 Wis. 643, 4 N. W. 798.

[a] (Ala. 1845) Plaintiff, who sues for the use of another for work and labor done by the party for whose use the suit was brought, could not recover the price of it, unless he stood in such a relation that the right to compensation inured to him.—Mooney v. Ivey, 8 Ala. 810.

[b] (Ill. 1881) A person employed by a firm as a bookkeeper and accountant may recover on common counts for services rendered to another at his request out of business hours, and for services during business hours performed by him with the permission of the firm employing him, though it is claimed his earnings belonged to the firm.—Wallace v. De Young, 98 Ill. 638, 38 Am. Rep. 108.

[c] (N. H. 1882) Defendant, being in the employ of W., was taken sick, and plaintiff was called to attend her as a physician. W., without defendant's request, paid the bill, with the intention of deducting it in the settlement with defendant for her labor. In an action brought by defendant for her labor, W. attempted to set off the bill paid to plaintiff. The set-off was disallowed on the ground that the item was not one of mutual account, nor in the same right with defendant's claim. Held, that W. might maintain an action of assumpsit in plaintiff's name for the amount thus paid by him.—Wallace v. Moulton, 62 N. H. 692.

[d] (N. Y. 1855) Where payment is to be made for labor, the law will give it to him who performs it, unless some other person can show a better title.—Lewis v. Trickey, 20 Barb. 387.

[e] (Pa. 1856) Where work is performed by partners, an assumpsit on a quantum meruit can only be sustained in their names, though the contract for the work was made by the party bringing the suit before the partnership commenced.—Schnader v. Schnader, 26 Pa. (2 Casey) 384.

[a] (Ala. 1880) Where A. works on B.'s plantation with the latter's consent, there is no implied promise by B. to pay for such work, unless such plantation was being cultivated by B. and in his interest.—Wood v. Brewer, 66 Ala. 570.

[b] (Ark. 1854) Where work is done for E. at the request of C., the common indebitatus count will be supported in an action of assumpsit against C.—Clark v. Roop, 15 Ark. 172.

[c] (Ind. 1862) Where a party has been imprisoned under a sentence of a court having no jurisdiction, he may, as to the keeper of the penitentiary, who has received benefit from his labor during his confinement, maintain his suit in assumpsit, but not so in the case of parties to the confinement who have received no benefit from his labor, such as the warden.—Patterson v. Prior, 18 Ind. 440, 81 Am. Dec. 367.

[d] (Ind. 1877) A city is liable as for work and labor to one who publishes a list of delinquent taxpayers upon request of the proper authorities.—City of Evansville v. Thayer, 59 Ind. 324.

[e] (Me. 1853) A. being sick, B. requested C. to take care of him; C. well knowing that B. acted only as the friend and agent of his neighbor, A. Held, that C. could sustain no action against B. for his services, and that the fact that A. and B. were partners made no difference.—Batchelder v. McKenny, 36 Me. 555.

[f] (Md. 1860) A defendant, who purchases a steamboat and has her repaired with the expectation of selling her to an association of which he and the plaintiff expect to become members, is liable for the repairs, unless by agreement the credit was to be given to the association.—Wells v. Turner, 16 Md. 133.

[g] (Md. 1860) If a party orders work to be done, it is immaterial for whose benefit it may be intended. He must pay for it, unless credit therefor be given to another.—Wells v. Turner, 16 Md. 133.

[h] (Mass. 1836) Where a third person takes possession of a shop and exercises his trade under an agreement that he shall have the profits of his labor, to be appropriated in the payment of the shop, and that, whenever he has paid a certain sum, the defendants will convey the shop to him, and that he shall deliver a monthly account of work done, and keep the books in the defendants' name, the defendants will not be liable for work and labor performed in the shop by plaintiff on such third person's application; there being no evidence that the plaintiff was hired on the defendants' credit.—Anderson v. Fuller, 35 Mass. (18 Pick.) 572.

[i] (Mass. 1841) Where selectmen without authority apply for a jury to reduce damages estimated by county commissioners upon the laying out of a town way, and a warrant is issued to an officer requiring him to summon a jury and determine the matter of complaint, and he performs the services, he may maintain an action against the selectmen to recover for such services.—Baker v. Thayer, 44 Mass. (3 Metc.) 312.

[j] (Mass. 1878) An insurance company, under a power in a mortgage from M., sold and conveyed certain land to B., its treasurer, who thereupon held the title merely in trust for the company. M., not knowing of the sale, applied to the company to arrange for certain repairs which the premises needed, and was referred to B., who agreed that M. should make the repairs and the company thereafter take a mortgage for a certain sum on the land, the old mortgage meanwhile to remain as it was. After M. had done the work he discovered the fact of the sale under the mortgage. Held, that M. could not maintain an action against B. for the cost of the work.—Meserve v. Bacon, 125 Mass. 499.

[k] (Miss. 1852) A clerk at whose request a printer advertises the sale of judgments for costs is liable to the printer, or a quantum meruit, for the expense of the advertising.—Buckingham v. Smith, 23 Miss. (1 Cushm.) 521.

[l] (N. Y. 1854) Where an architect performs work and labor on a building under the direction of two persons, an action will lie against them jointly, though no partnership exists between them in either the land or the building.—Beach v. Raymond, 2 E. D. Smith, 496.

[m] (N. C. 1848) Where A. employs B. to do work for C. and for C.'s benefit, the law will not imply a promise by A. to pay for the same; and B. cannot recover of A. therefor upon the common count for work and labor done.—Mosby v. Hunter, 31 N. C. 119.

[n] (Ohio, 1842) Where a subscription is made for the construction of a road, when the road is completed, the person by whom it was constructed may recover from the subscribers on the common counts for work and labor.—Sperry v. Johnson, 11 Ohio, 452.

[a] (Ill. 1878) Where materials are furnished from time to time, under a special contract to furnish the iron work necessary for a building, and the special contract is abandoned before its full performance by reason of the destruction of the building in an incomplete state, in an action as on a quantum meruit the statute of limitations will begin to run as against each item or parcel from the time of its delivery.—Schillo v. McEwen, 90 Ill. 77.

[b] (N. Y. 1816) Where a father promised to reward his son for his services by providing for him in his will, an action by the son before the death of the father to recover for his services was premature.—Patterson v. Patterson, 13 Johns. 379.

[c] (Pa. 1845) Where one has performed work and labor under an agreement, to be paid therefor by note of the party employing him, and there had been a refusal to deliver the note at the time specified in the agreement, indebitatus assumpsit will not lie for the work and labor until after the time when the note would have matured, if it had been given.—Huston v. Mehaffey, 2 Clark, 525.

[d] (Pa. 1878) Where an action was brought in 1873 to recover services which were rendered by plaintiff in 1861, the demand, if there was no special contract, was barred by limitations.—Pollock v. Ray, 85 Pa. 428.

§ 40. Defects, objections, and waiver.

[a] (La. 1853) When the particular items of the work sued for are known to defendant, and he does not ask in his answer for a detailed bill thereof, he cannot ask for it afterwards.—Chapman v. Hart, 8 La. Ann. 35.

[b] (Nev. 1868) Where a complaint for work and labor omits to allege specifically the value of the same or a promise to pay, and defendant, without demurring, answers, denying the indebtedness and admitting the services performed, the defects in the complaint are cured.—McManus v. Ophir Silver Min. Co., 4 Nev. 15.

[c] (N. Y. 1806) In assumpsit for labor done, the want of an averment that the labor was actually performed will, after judgment, be presumed to have been supplied by proof.—Owens v. Morehouse, 1 Johns. 276.

[d] (N. Y. 1883) In an action to recover for services as upon a quantum meruit, plaintiff is not concluded as to the value of the service by the amount originally claimed in the complaint, which has been amended by increasing the amount, nor by discrepancies between different bills of particulars furnished.—Sherwood v. Hauser, 94 N. Y. 626.

[e] (S. C. 1812) A declaration was indebitatus assumpsit for work, labor, etc., and quantum meruit; and defendant pleaded that there was a special agreement, and that plaintiff had violated it, and concluded to the country, upon which plaintiff joined issue. Held, that the plea and issue precluded the defendant from excepting to the declaration.—Stoll v. Ryan, 1 Tread. Const. 96.

[f] (Wis. 1881) Objection could not be made to the introduction of evidence because of the insufficiency of a complaint alleging that defendant was indebted to plaintiff in a specified sum for work done at his request between named dates, and that, though often requested to pay the same, he refused to do so, when the answer merely set up a counterclaim, without demanding a bill of particulars.—Bue v. Ketchum, 51 Wis. 324, 8 N. W. 231.

(N. Y. 1810) Comstock v. Smith, 7 Johns. 87;
(Ohio, 1871) Carey v. Post, 2 Cin. R. 62.

[b] (U. S. 1808) In an action of assumpsit the declaration is sufficient where it alleges for labor and services generally.—Edwards v. Nichols, Fed. Cas. No. 4,296 [Brunner, Col. Cas. 43].

[c] (Ala. 1888) Where plaintiff agreed to serve defendant for 12 months, and was to receive a part of the net proceeds of the business during that time, a declaration stating that he was prevented by sickness from discharging his duty under the contract for the space of 4 months, and claiming the part of the net proceeds which accrued during the 8 months, is insufficient, as it assumes, as a consequence of the inability of plaintiff to render the services, that the mode of ascertaining his compensation was changed. —Greene v. Lintum, 7 Port. 133, 31 Am. Dec. 707.

[d] (Ala. 1851) Where a plaintiff sues for the work and labor of her minor, she must aver in the statement of her cause of action that the father was dead, or that she was entitled to the minor's services as guardian or otherwise.—Jones v. Buckley, 19 Ala. 604.

[e] (Cal. 1874) An allegation that the defendant on a certain day was indebted to the plaintiff in a certain sum for work and labor before that time performed for him at his request states a cause of action.—Pavisich v. Bean, 48 Cal. 364.

[f] (Cal. 1894) In an action for services, a complaint which alleges that defendant is indebted to plaintiff in a certain sum on account of work, labor, and services performed at the request of defendant, and that he has not paid therefor, is sufficient as against a general demurrer.—Smith v. Waite, 103 Cal. 372, 37 Pac. 232.

[g] (Conn. 1808) A declaration for services performed or labor done generally, without any particular specification, is good.—Edwards v. Nichols, 3 Day, 16, Fed. Cas. No. 4,296.

[h] (Ind. 1857) Where a complaint counts upon the orders of a board of commissioners for the payment of money for the construction of a bridge out of a certain fund, and the action of the board thereon, it cannot be regarded as a count for work and labor. — Union County Com'rs v. Mason, 9 Ind. 97.

[i] (Ind. 1874) A complaint in general form for work and labor is not rendered demurrable by the fact that it sets out the manner of the employment and character of the work with unnecessary particularity, where the facts stated do not show a special contract, nor increase defendant's liability beyond such general employment.—Ft. Wayne, J. & S. R. Co. v. McDonald, 48 Ind. 241.

[j] (Ind. 1884) A common count for indexing records for a county board not in the office of the board, which failed to allege that the services were requested, was insufficient.—Hoffman v. Lake County Com'rs, 96 Ind. 84.

[k] (Ind. 1893) In an action against an estate for services rendered the intestate, the complaint alleged that plaintiff, when young, entered the family of deceased, his uncle, and worked without compensation, till he was 21 years old, under an agreement between plaintiff's father and deceased that the latter would raise plaintiff as his son, and provide for him by his will, which he failed to do, and that plaintiff's services were worth $5,000. Held, that the complaint is for the recovery of the value of the services on a quantum meruit, and not for a recovery on the special contract.—Puterbaugh v. Puterbaugh, 7 Ind. App. 280, 33 N. E. 808.

[l] (Kan. 1888) A petition, reciting a contract void as being incapable of performance within one year, is not demurrable where the other facts stated therein are sufficient to warrant a recovery upon the implied contract for the value of the work performed.—Wonsettler v. Lee, 40 Kan. 367, 19 Pac. 862.

[m] (Kan. 1895) A petition alleging that defendant is indebted to plaintiff in a certain sum for services performed by plaintiff for defendant at the latter's special instance, and that the same is due and unpaid, and containing an itemized statement of the services, and the value claimed for them, is not open to an objection to the introduction of evidence under it on the ground that it fails to state a cause of action, in that it does not allege the value of the services, or that defendant derived benefit from them.—Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Barnes, 2 Kan. App. 642, 42 Pac. 938.

[n] (Ky. 1894) In an action to recover for services rendered in selling certain property for defendant, it was sufficient to allege that the services were rendered with defendant's consent, and that he accepted the benefit of them. —Viley v. Pettit, 96 Ky. 576, 29 S. W. 438, 16 Ky. Law Rep. 286.

[o] (Minn. 1861) A complaint, alleging a written contract between the parties under which work was done at times and places named, the value of the work, the amount paid, and the balance unpaid, with a proper demand for judgment for the balance, is sufficient.—Nash v. Murnan, 6 Minn. 577 (Gil. 411).

[p] (Minn. 1871) A complaint set forth that plaintiff and defendant entered into a sealed agreement for the erection of a building for defendant at a specific price, according to plans and specifications; that no plans and specifications were furnished, and that performance according thereto was practically abandoned; that plaintiff did the work as directed, under the immediate direction and supervision of the defendant, frequently protesting that it was insecure, and, when nearly completed, the building, without plaintiff's fault, fell to the ground. Judgment was demanded for the unpaid balance of the contract price, less the value of the work yet to be done when the building fell. Held, that the action was upon a quantum meruit, the contract being referred to for the purpose of determining the reasonable value of the work, and fully stating the origin of the plaintiff's cause of action.—Siebert v. Leonard, 17 Minn. 433 (Gil. 410).

[q] (Mo. 1866) Where a party, after alleging a contract and stating its terms, abandons the contract price and seeks a recovery on a quantum meruit, he must show a reason for such abandonment.—Stoddard v. Murdock, 37 Mo. 580.

[r] (Mo. 1876) Where the petition in an action to recover for work and materials furnished declares only on the contract, the plaintiff cannot recover judgment on a quantum meruit. —Eyerman v. Mt. Sinai Cemetery Ass'n, 61 Mo. 489.

[s] (Mo. 1891) In an action for labor and materials done and furnished defendant, plaintiff may count specially on the contract, and also on quantum meruit for the same cause of action, and go to the jury on both counts.—Globe Light & Heat Co. v. Doud, 47 Mo. App. 439.

[ss] (N. J.) A declaration is bad, if no time is therein stated when the services were performed.—(1824) Gordon v. Myers, 8 N. J. Law (3 Halst.) 69; (1828) Vanguilder v. Stull, 10 N. J. Law (5 Halst.) 233.

[t] (N. J. 1854) A state of demand for work and labor must state by whom the work and labor was performed.—Erving v. Ingram, 24 N. J. Law (4 Zab.) 520.

[tt] (N. J. 1860) A declaration for "seven days' work done by his (the plaintiff's) son, J. M., harvesting and haying at $1.25 per day—$8.75," is good, and properly claims for work done by the plaintiff by his son.—Brown v. Ramsay, 29 N. J. Law (5 Dutch.) 117.

[u] (N. J. 1894) Where the declaration alleges the breach of an express contract for certain service at a stipulated price, and does not contain a quantum meruit count, it is error to instruct the jury that the plaintiff may recover what his service was reasonably worth.—Martinez v. Runkle, 57 N. J. Law (28 Vroom) 111, 30 Atl. 593; Runkle v. Martinez, Id.

[uu] (N. Y. 1859) Where a party sues for work and labor, if there is a special contract, not completed or executed as to its terms, the plaintiff should state it, or refer to it, in his complaint, and allege a partial performance. If he fails to do so, the defendant may set it up, and it will be a good defense.—Atkinson v. Collins, 30 Barb. 430.

[v] (N. Y. 1884) The Code allows a statement of each cause of action, although arising out of one transaction. If one count is upon an agreed price, and another upon a quantum meruit, "unnecessary repetition" cannot be charged.—Longprey v. Yates, 31 Hun, 432.

[vv] (N. Y. 1885) A complaint, alleging that plaintiff agreed to do certain plastering for $85 per floor, and that he performed the work, and that defendant became indebted to him in the sum of $202, "and that the work was reasonably worth the sum," was broad enough to allow recovery on the common counts for work and labor done.—Gerhardt v. Amman, 2 City Ct. R. 104.

[w] (N. Y. 1887) A plaintiff, suing for services, alleging that they were reasonably worth a certain sum, and that defendant agreed to pay it, cannot be required to make his complaint more definite by electing between a quantum meruit and the specific agreement.—Goets v. Van Au, 12 Civ. Proc. R. 104.

[ww] (N. Y. 1891) A complaint which alleges that plaintiffs and another performed certain labor for and supplied materials to the defendants at their request, and that plaintiffs' colaborer assigned his rights against defendants to them, and that defendants had received moneys to the use and benefit of the plaintiffs, which they failed to pay over, shows a sufficient cause of action against the defendants.—Hodge v. Drake, 60 Hun, 577, 14 N. Y. Supp. 355.

[x] (N. C. 1892) Where the complaint alleged that defendant was indebted in a specific sum for work and labor, which defendant promised to pay, and which was due before suit commenced, it is sufficient to warrant a recovery either on express contract or on a quantum meruit.—Roberts v. P. A. Deming Woodworking Co., 111 N. C. 432, 16 S. E. 415.

[xx] (Pa. 1896) A statement of a claim for work done and materials supplied must aver the amount or sum that each item is reasonably worth.—Murphy v. Taylor, 173 Pa. 317, 33 Atl. 1041, 37 Wkly. Notes Cas. 437.

[y] (S. D. 1892) A complaint alleging that defendant is indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $200 for work and labor performed by him for defendant during the year 1888 at defendant's request, for which work and labor said defendant agreed to pay plaintiff the sum of $200, but that defendant has not paid said sum, or any part thereof, states a sufficient cause of action, although subject to a motion to be made more definite and certain.—Busta v. Wardall, 3 S. D. 141, 52 N. W. 418.

[yy] (Tenn. 1871) A declaration for labor and materials furnished, alleging that defendant on a certain day, "by his certain account for work and materials rendered and proven, and now shown to the court, became liable to said plaintiff" in a certain sum, is not sufficient.—Stover v. Allen, 53 Tenn. (6 Heisk.) 614.

[z] (Tex. 1896) That part of a petition in an action to recover divers sums on account of the construction of a railroad, reciting: "At the special instance and request of defendants, plaintiff did work on said line of railway on the * * * dates set out in Exhibit C, which is filed herewith and made a part hereof, which said work consisted in building and repairing bridges, packing up track, loading and unloading pile timber, hauling iron, and repairing cars, as fully set out in said exhibit, in the aggregate to $135.67; that defendants thereafter received and accepted said work, and became liable to the plaintiff for the reasonable value thereof, to wit, the sum of $135.67"—is sufficiently certain in its allegations to present a good cause of action without any reference to the exhibit.—Laing v. Hanson (Civ. App.) 36 S. W. 116.

[zz] (Wash. 1895) The complaint, in an action to recover the balance due for work performed, need not allege a demand.—Robertson v. Woolley, 12 Wash. 326, 41 Pac. 48.

§ 42. Plea or answer and subsequent pleadings.

[a] (Ind. 1880) Plaintiff sued to recover for services rendered in preparing and amending articles of incorporation for a ditch company. The answer alleged that plaintiff guarantied that he would make said articles perfect and sufficient in law, but that the same had been, in a suit by certain third parties against said company, adjudged insufficient. It did not appear that plaintiff had any notice of such suit. Held, that the answer was insufficient for want of a direct averment that such articles were defective or insufficient.—Burns v. Stanley, 72 Ind. 350.

[b] (Ind. 1880) In a suit for services rendered by plaintiff for defendants in preparing and amending articles of incorporation for a certain ditch company, an answer averring that plaintiff was employed by such company after its incorporation, and that others than defendants are members, and are solvent and within the jurisdiction, without averring that the work which plaintiff was employed to do by the company was the same as that sued for, is insufficient on demurrer.—Burns v. Stanley, 72 Ind. 350.

[c] (Ind. 1883) To a common count for work done, defendant pleaded that he took plaintiff, a destitute child, as an act of charity and without contract, and provided for and educated him as a member of his family. Held, that the plea was bad in bar as not denying the implied contract, and bad as set-off, as it appeared that the acts of defendant were gratuitous.—Gerard v. Dill, 96 Ind. 476.

[d] (N. Y. 1852) In an action for work, etc., where the answer merely denies the allegations in the complaint, the defendant cannot, on the trial, insist upon an award of arbitrators as a bar to the action.—Brazill v. Isham, 1 E. D. Smith, 437, affirmed (1854) 12 N. Y. (2 Kern.) 9.

[e] (N. Y. 1864) In an action for work and labor performed, the answer, after admitting the performance, set forth in defense that the defendants, during the time of performance, had paid certain sums of money to the plaintiff in part payment for his services, and claimed that the sums so paid constituted a counterclaim against the plaintiff. Held, that the facts pleaded constituted a defense of payment only, and not a counterclaim, and therefore, though there was no reply, that the whole answer did not stand admitted.—Burke v. Thorne, 44 Barb. 363.

[f] (Or. 1879) An answer to a complaint for services rendered, denying that the defendants promised to pay a reasonable sum for such services, but not denying that the services were performed for defendants, raises no issue to be tried by a jury.—Louis v. Brown, 7 Or. 326.

[g] (Pa. 1896) In an action for work done and materials supplied, the affidavit of defense is sufficient if it alleges that defendant has a just, full, and true legal defense to the whole of plaintiff's claim, and that she made a contract with plaintiff for the work and materials to be furnished, for a certain sum, payable on completion of the work, and that since the completion of the work she has always been ready and willing to pay him said sum, but that he always refused to accept it.—Murphy v. Taylor, 173 Pa. 317, 33 Atl. 1041, 37 Wkly. Notes Cas. 437.

[h] (S. C. 1896) In an action for labor performed, an answer admitting that the labor was performed, but alleging payment, and denying that defendant owed plaintiff the amount sued for, or any part thereof, does not admit that the sum sued for is due plaintiff, so as to entitle him to judgment.—Young v. Green, 46 S. C. 12, 23 S. E. 981.

[i] (Va. 1858) In assumpsit on the common count for work and labor, defendant, after pleading the general issue, pleaded specially that the action was founded on a special contract, subject to a condition precedent which had not been performed by the defendant. Held, that the special plea amounted to the general issue and must be rejected.—Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Polly, 14 Grat. 447; Same v. Laffertys, Id. 478.

§ 43. Issues, proof, and variance.

[a] (Iowa, 1872) In an action on an account for work and labor performed, the plaintiff cannot recover on facts showing a guaranty by defendants that other parties would pay for the work.—Packard v. Snell, 35 Iowa, 80.

[b] (Ky. 1825) Counts for work and labor done by plaintiff "on defendant's walls" were not supported by evidence of work and labor done at the plaintiff's request on the farm of and for the benefit of another; but the count, to support such evidence, must have been special.—Scott v. Messick, 18 Ky. (2 T. B. Mon.) 80.

[c] (Ky. 1827) A count in indebitatus assumpsit for work done on defendant's wall is supported by proof of work on another's wall at defendant's request.—Scott v. Messick, 20 Ky. (4 T. B. Mon.) 535.

[d] (Ky. 1866) In an action for services alleged to have been rendered in 1863, it appeared that the services were rendered in 1864. Held, that this variance was not sufficient ground for a nonsuit, and that the evidence would support a verdict of the jury in favor of the plaintiff.—Gentry v. Doolin, 64 Ky. (1 Bush) 1.

[e] (Me. 1855) In an action by a deputy sheriff, with a count on an account annexed and for services performed, the account annexed was, "Your proportion of costs and expenses of suit, W. v. N." Held, that plaintiff might recover under "services performed" for the service of a writ in another action.—Nutt v. Merrill, 40 Me. 237.

[f] (Mass. 1827) A count for services rendered by a settled minister is supported by proof of preaching in private houses to such as chose to attend; the parish having prevented his preaching in the meeting house.—Thompson v. Catholic Congregational Soc. in Rehoboth, 22 Mass. (5 Pick.) 469.

[g] (Mass. 1874) A count on an account annexed for "labor" cannot be established by proof that, during a former partnership between the parties, defendant had not fulfilled his promise to employ some one to offset the services of an employé furnished by plaintiff.—Dodd v. Tarr, 116 Mass. 287.

[h] (Mass. 1875) A declaration for work performed for the defendant is not supported by a promise by defendant to see plaintiff paid for the work which he originally agreed to perform for another person.—Hogan v. Coleman, 119 Mass. 96.

[i] (Miss. 1844) In assumpsit for labor done, the allegation of the time of the promise is immaterial, and need not be proved as laid.—Hill v. Robeson, 10 Miss. (2 Smedes & M.) 541.

[j] (N. H. 1847) A declaration in general assumpsit for "ironing a wagon" is not supported by evidence that defendant had promised to do such work for plaintiff and had failed to do so.—Smith v. Mudgett, 20 N. H. 527.

[k] (N. H. 1856) A plaintiff, by limiting his claim to services performed between certain dates, may make those dates material, so that he cannot claim for services before or after.—Manchester & L. R. R. v. Fisk, 33 N. H. 297.

[l] (N. Y. 1834) Where an item in a bill was, "To 12,000 yards of hard-pan excavation, $3,600," the plaintiff was not held to 30 cents per yard, but was allowed to recover beyond that price; the defendant having come to trial prepared to contest the value of the work, thereby showing that he had not been misled.—Dubois v. Delaware & H. Canal Co., 12 Wend. 334.

[m] (N. Y. 1885) Where one who has performed work under a special contract sues for the price without setting up the contract, he must show performance, although the answer admits that he performed certain work, and merely denies allegations of value.—Farley v. Browning, 13 Daly, 85.

[n] (N. Y. 1887) A complaint alleged "that the plaintiff did between the years 1881 and 1885, at the request of said defendant, certain work, labor, and services, * * * of the value of $2,550." Then followed an allegation that no part of the claim had been paid and that demand had been made. The answer admitted that plaintiff performed certain work, labor, and services during the times mentioned, but averred that plaintiff's services had been fully paid for, etc., and demanded dismissal of the complaint. Held, that the only issue raised was that of payment.—McElroy v. Brooklyn Underground R. Co., 12 N. Y. St. Rep. 586.

[o] (N. Y. 1889) In an action on an alleged contract for plaintiff's services in the purchase of bonds, whereby plaintiff was to receive half the profits, the court found there was no contract, and that plaintiff rendered no services for which defendant promised, expressly or impliedly, to pay. Plaintiff made no request to amend his complaint so as to recover for the value of his services, and offered no evidence but in support of the alleged contract. Held, that he could not recover on the quantum meruit.—Rubino v. Scott, 118 N. Y. 662, 22 N. E. 1103.

[p] (N. C. 1853) To recover on the common counts for materials furnished and work done, it must be shown that the materials were received or used by defendant, and the work of value to him.—Byerly v. Kepley, 46 N. C. 35.

[q] (N. C. 1886) Under a complaint alleging employment and the rendition of services, plaintiff may recover on the special contract or on the common count.—Lewis v. Albemarle, & R. R. Co., 95 N. C. 179.

[r] (Tex. 1882) Where plaintiff sued for the value of services "as per contract," but the evidence showed that the services were rendered without any contract, it was error to permit a recovery on a quantum meruit.—Jones v. Brazile, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 299.

[s] (Wis. 1873) Under a pleading in an action to recover for services alleged to have been rendered by plaintiff for defendant, averring that such services were rendered "within six years last past," plaintiff cannot recover for services rendered more than six years before the commencement of the action.—Paine v. Trumbull, 33 Wis. 164.

§ 44. —— Evidence admissible under pleadings.

Admissibility of evidence of defense and set-off, see post, § 45.

[a] (Ala. 1837) Where a declaration contains a count on a special agreement and on a quantum meruit for work and labor, and plaintiff waives the special agreement and proceeds to trial on the common counts, evidence may be offered in support of the common counts, over objection that plaintiff admitted that there was a special contract.—Blair v. Asbury, 4 Port. 435.

[b] (Ala. 1860) Where a bill of particulars, in an action for work and labor done, contains an item for work done on a granary, evidence is admissible to prove that the plaintiff put up a threshing machine in a shed on the side of the granary, consisting of a shaft made fast to the building and cogwheels to move it, and to show the value of such machinery, when the testimony does not operate as a surprise upon the adverse party.—Robinson's Adm'rs v. Allison, 36 Ala. 525.

[c] (Cal. 1864) In an action to recover for services, work, and labor performed under a contract, plaintiff, under an allegation of services performed by himself, may prove and recover for services rendered by an engineer under him, unless it appears by the nature and terms of the employment that the services of plaintiff himself were contracted for, and that no other person could under the agreement fill his place.—Leet v. Wilson, 24 Cal. 398.

[d] (Ind. 1841) In an action for work and labor performed for defendant on the "W. & E. Canal," evidence of work done on an extension of that canal is admissible, although the part extended is not uniformly called by the same name.—Ball v. McCall, 5 Blackf. 496.

[e] (Ind. 1864) Under a complaint for work and labor and service performed in the general language of the common count, and a bill of particulars in the language, "A. to B., Dr., to service, work, and labor," evidence is admissible to show that the services were rendered by plaintiff as foreman and general manager, and what their value thus rendered was; and such value can be deduced from all the circumstances of the case, including the success or failure to make money by such services.—Adams v. Adams' Adm'r, 23 Ind. 50.

[f] (Ind. 1893) In an action against an estate for services rendered the intestate, the second count of the complaint alleged that plaintiff lived till he was 26 years old with deceased, who then contracted to convey to plaintiff 80 acres of land if plaintiff would assist him in building a house on the land, and occupy it, and divide the crops with deceased, which contract plaintiff performed on his part, but deceased, dying, failed to convey the land; that plaintiff then sued defendant, as sole heir of deceased, to quiet title to the land, and obtained judgment that two thirds of the land was his, and one third belonged to defendant, as heir, and that, by reason of the failure of deceased to convey the land, he had lost title to one third thereof, valued at $1,667, which was due to him from the estate. Held, that the court properly admitted in evidence the pleadings and judgment in the suit to quiet title, since such evidence showed that defendant was the sole heir of deceased, and that all the debts except the one in suit were paid, and therefore tended to prove the averment in the present suit that plaintiff had been deprived of one third interest in the land.—Puterbaugh v. Puterbaugh, 7 Ind. App. 280, 33 N. E. 808.

[g] (La. 1840) In an action for work according to a bill of prices agreed on and extra work, plaintiff may prove the value of the whole work.—Collings v. Hamilton, 14 La. 339.

[h] (La. 1855) Where a person is sued for services of a certain amount, he may, under the general issue, prove a special contract to show their value.—Budreaux v. Tucker, 10 La. Ann. 80.

[i] (Miss. 1831) A complainant cannot, on a count for work and labor, introduce evidence as to the materials furnished.—Richardson v. Oneal, 1 Miss. (Walk.) 469.

[j] (Mo. 1889) In an action for materials furnished and work done without any special contract or separate price for any of the items, an objection does not lie to the introduction of any evidence under the petition because there is not attached thereto an account stating separately the value of each item.—N. O. Nelson Mfg. Co. v. Mitchell, 38 Mo. App. 321.

[k] (N. Y. 1829) Evidence of work done in 1820 could not be given under a bill of particulars specifying items of work for which a recovery was claimed, to which was attached the date of April 20, 1821.—Burr v. Baldwin, 2 Wend. 580.

[l] (N. Y. 1895) Proof of the value of services is not admissible in an action on a special agreement to pay a certain sum for the services.—Marston v. Baerenklau (City Ct. N. Y.) 11 Misc. Rep. 620, 32 N. Y. Supp. 785, judgment affirmed (Com. Pl. 1895) 13 Misc. Rep. 13, 33 N. Y. Supp. 994; Robinson v. Hunt, 88 Hun, 285, 34 N. Y. Supp. 794.

[m] (N. C. 1881) In an action to recover for services rendered, it was competent for plaintiff to prove that he was in the service of defendant for a longer period than that charged in his account, and to explain that the excess was the equivalent of time lost while he was in the defendant's employment.—McPeters v. Ray, 85 N. C. 462.

[n] (Ohio, 1854) Under a count alleging that in consideration of labor heretofore performed defendant promised to pay, etc., without averring a request, or that the promise was after the claim had been barred by the statute of limitations, evidence of the bar and the subsequent promise is admissible.—Haymaker's Ex'rs v. Haymaker, 4 Ohio St. 272.

[o] (Vt. 1895) In an action for deceit against one who induced plaintiff to marry him by false representations that he was single, and to live with him thereafter for over 30 years as his wife, where the complaint alleged that during such time defendant, with the aid of plaintiff's services, accumulated considerable property, evidence of defendant's wealth was admissible to show the value of such services.—Morrill v. Palmer, 68 Vt. 1, 33 Atl. 829, 33 L. R. A. 411.

§ 45. — Defenses and set-off.

Set-off and counterclaim in general, see ante, § 36.

[a] (Ala. 1859) In an action to recover the value of work and labor done, defendant is entitled under the general issue to recoup the damages caused by the workman's breach of contract in his manner of performing the work, under Laws 1853–54, p. 60, providing that in all cases of defamation, or of injuries to the person or to real or personal property, a plea of not guilty puts in issue all the material allegations of the complaint, and in all suits where the defendant relies on a denial of the cause of action set forth he may plead the general issue.—English v. Wilson, 34 Ala. 201.

[b] (Cal. 1859) In a suit for services on a quantum meruit, negligence in performing them may be shown, under a denial that they were of the value alleged.—Bridges v. Paige, 13 Cal. 640.

[c] (Ind. 1891) In an action for services rendered, defendant may show, under an answer of general denial, that the services were rendered for a third person, for whom defendant was agent.—Gray v. Taylor, 2 Ind. App. 155, 28 N. E. 220.

[d] (La. 1873) Though plaintiffs sued for the value of work as a whole, without stating any specific value on his separate items, and defendant substantially accepted in his answer the issue presented, it was competent for defendant to show by witnesses the separate value of each of the items which made up the aggregate work, in order that the correctness of the judge's charge might be properly arrived at. —Gordy v. Veazey, 25 La. Ann. 518.

[e] (Md. 1859) To a quantum meruit, under nonassumpsit, without a special plea, evidence that defendant supported plaintiff's family during the service sued for is admissible.—Brooke v. Quynn, 13 Md. 379.

[f] (Mass. 1863) The defense that an action for work and labor was prematurely commenced is not open, unless set up in the answer; and if the declaration contains two counts, the first of which is founded upon a special contract, by the terms of which nothing was due at the commencement of the action, and the second is a general count for work and labor, defendant cannot avail himself of the contract in defense to the second count, unless he sets it up in the answer.—Reed v. Inhabitants of Scituate, 89 Mass. (7 Allen) 141.

[g] (Mass. 1878) In an action under a count annexed for services, the defendant may, under the general denial in his answer, introduce evidence of the plaintiff's negligence and want of skill.—Caverly v. McOwen, 123 Mass. 574.

[h] (N. H. 1858) Upon the general issue to quantum meruit against an administrator for services rendered by plaintiff and his family while residing on the intestate's farm under agreement with him, benefits derived from the farm by plaintiff may be credited as payments for his services, without any set-off to plaintiff's demand being filed.—Ham v. Goodrich, 37 N. H. 185.

[i] (N. Y. 1854) Where the answer to a count on a quantum meruit set out a special contract for work, labor, and materials, while the proof was for work and labor only, this is not a variance affecting the substance of the defense, and is not material under the Code.—Cobb v. West, 11 N. Y. Super. Ct. (4 Duer) 38.

[j] (N. Y. 1855) Defendant, in a quantum meruit for work and labor, is entitled, under an answer containing a general denial of the complaint, to introduce evidence that the work was unskillfully done, or that it is worth less than the amount claimed.—Raymond v. Richardson, 4 E. D. Smith, 171.

[k] (N. Y. 1855) Where, in an action for work and labor on a building, the defendant specifies various defects in the work, and alleges generally that it was not performed in a workmanlike manner, he may prove defects other than those specially stated in the answer.—Trimble v. Stilwell, 4 E. D. Smith, 512.

[l] (N. Y. 1869) Plaintiff, in a complaint to recover for services rendered, alleged that defendant was indebted to him for such services in a certain amount, being the balance remaining due after sundry payments made by defendant; but the extent or value of the services was not stated. The answer was merely a general denial. Held, that defendant, upon these pleadings, should be allowed to prove payments made to plaintiff on account of the services alleged. The issue involved was not merely as to the agreement and the time which plaintiff worked, but necessarily as to the different payments made, so as to determine what, in fact, was the balance of defendant's debt.—Quin v. Lloyd, 41 N. Y. 349.

[m] (Or. 1871) Where, in an action for work and labor, the defendant seeks to show that the plaintiff did not labor diligently, he must raise the question by his answer.—Albee v. Albee, 3 Or. 321.

[n] (Pa. 1848) In assumpsit for work and labor done, under a plea of the general issue without notice of special matter, the defendant may prove that the work was done in an unworkmanlike manner.—Gaw v. Wolcott, 10 Pa. (10 Barr) 43.

[o] (Wash. 1895) In an action for services rendered, defendant cannot, under a denial that the services were of the value alleged, or of any value, show that the services were not rendered.—Buddress v. Schafer, 12 Wash. 310, 41 Pac. 43.

§ 46. —— Existence or denial of special contract.

[a] On a quantum meruit for services, plaintiff cannot recover on proof of a special agreement for the services.

—(Md. 1808) Cushman v. Sims' Adm'r, 2 Har. & J. 352;

(N. Y. 1827) Davenport v. Wheeler, 7 Cow. 231.

[b] (U. S. 1803) Upon general indebitatus assumpsit for a certain sum for work and labor, there must be evidence of an express promise to pay a certain sum.—Farrell v. Knapp, Fed. Cas. No. 4,684 [1 Cranch, C. C. 131].

[c] (Ala. 1846) Where plaintiff declares on the common counts for work and labor, he cannot recover, if it is proved that there was a special contract between the parties that plaintiff should receive a part of the crop, although the precise terms of the contract are not shown. —Snedicor v. Leachman, 10 Ala. 330.

[d] (Cal. 1894) In an action for services rendered by plaintiff's assignor, the complaint alleged that they were rendered at the special request of defendant. Defendant, in its answer, admitted that the services were rendered, and set out a copy of the agreement between such assignor and its manager. Held, that it was not error to admit such agreement in evidence against an objection by the defendant.—Caffrey v. Omilak Gold & Silver Min. Co., 36 Pac. 888, 652.

[e] (Ind. 1879) Where work has been done and materials furnished under a special contract, the contract having been fully performed in an action upon the common counts, the special contract and the performance thereunder may be proved.—Shilling v. Templeton, 66 Ind. 585.

[f] (Kan. 1896) The indebitatus common count may be declared on, and a recovery thereunder had, in an action brought to recover money due plaintiff for personal services rendered under a contract fully performed on his part, nothing remaining to be done except payment by defendant; and a cause of action may be established by evidence of either a special or an implied contract.—Schwartzel v. Karnes, 2 Kan. App. 782, 44 Pac. 41.

[g] (Kan. 1896) When the petition in an action brought to recover money due plaintiff for personal services rendered under a contract fully performed on his part, nothing remaining to be done except payment by defendant, consists of only the indebitatus count, and plaintiff introduces evidence to prove the reasonable value of the services performed, defendant may show, under a general denial, that the amount or value of the services was fixed by a special contract; and, if a special contract is proven, it governs as to the amount which plaintiff can recover.—Schwartzel v. Karnes, 2 Kan. App. 782, 44 Pac. 41.

[h] (La. 1833) In an action on a quantum meruit for work, defendant may prove a contract signed by plaintiff and a third person, to prove the former's assent to do the work for less than demanded.—Foster v. Kokernot, 5 La. 260.

[i] (Me. 1848) Plaintiff declared only upon an implied contract for services performed, and the proof was that they were performed under a special contract and for a person other than defendant, who had no connection with the transactions until long afterwards. Held, that plaintiff could not recover by proof of a promise by defendant to pay such debt, and that there ought to have been a count upon the promise to pay the debt of the other person.—Parker v. Emery, 28 Me. (15 Shep.) 492.

[j] (Me. 1862) In an action to recover for labor done, if defendant, in the specification of his grounds of defense, does not deny the performance of the labor, but admits it, and alleges a special contract and payment, plaintiff will not be required to offer proof of its performance, to entitle him to some portion of the damages claimed, unless defendant shall establish by evidence some ground of defense.—Skillings v. Norris, 50 Me. 72.

[k] (Mass. 1868) In an action for services rendered, plaintiff, without being first compelled to elect whether he would rely on an implied contract, may offer evidence of an express agreement, and at the same time show that the services were rendered under such circumstances as to imply an agreement.—Packard v. Reynolds, 100 Mass. 153.

[l] (Mich. 1879) A declaration on the common counts will not support a claim to recover for six months' services at $125 upon evidence of an express agreement for two years' employment at $1,500 a year if satisfactory to the employer.—Kalamazoo Novelty Mfg. Works v. Macalister, 40 Mich. 84.

[m] (Minn. 1894) In an action on a quantum meruit for work performed, defendant cannot, under a mere denial, avail himself of an express contract as to the price as a defense to the action.—Register Printing Co. v. Willis, 57 Minn. 93, 58 N. W. 825.

[n] (Mo. 1852) A written agreement, not under seal, and having been executed, need not be declared upon, but may be given in evidence in an action of assumpsit for services rendered under it.—Carroll v. Paul's Adm'r, 16 Mo. 226.

[o] (Mo. 1896) The disclosure of a special contract at the trial of an action on a quantum meruit will not defeat the action, but will merely limit the amount of recovery.—Henderson v. Mace, 64 Mo. App. 393, 2 Mo. App. Rep'r, 1009.

[p] (N. Y. 1885) One suing for the price of work done under a special contract must prove the performance of the contract, even though he does not set it up.—Farley v. Browning, 15 Abb. N. C. 301.

[q] (N. Y. 1888) In an action for work performed, it is not error, under a general denial, to reject evidence offered by defendant to show that plaintiff was hired and had been paid by defendant's contractor.—Fox v. Turner, 49 Hun, 610, 2 N. Y. Supp. 164.

[r] (N. C. 1889) Where a complaint alleges that defendant is indebted to plaintiff $1,440 "for services performed as clerk in defendant's store at $20 a month," giving the time of employment, plaintiff may prove services either on special contract or the quantum meruit, within Code, § 260, providing that pleadings shall be liberally construed, with a view to substantial justice.—Stokes v. Taylor, 104 N. C. 394, 10 S. E. 566.

[s] (Pa. 1889) Under a quantum meruit for literary services rendered, no recovery can be had on proof that defendant's testator was to publish a book to be written by plaintiff, the profits to be divided between them after the cost of publication was paid.—Appeal of Keyser, 124 Pa. 80, 16 Atl. 577, 23 Wkly. Notes Cas. 201.

[t] (Vt. 1844) Under a plea of the general issue in indebitatus assumpsit for work and labor for defendant's father, defendant may show, as tending to prove that there was no contract of employment between plaintiff and her father, that when she came to reside in her father's family she brought with her several small children, who were maintained in the father's family at his expense.—Fitch v. Peckham, 16 Vt. 150.

[u] (Va. 1811) In general assumpsit for services rendered, plaintiff cannot show that defendant had employed him and was to pay him a certain quantity of tobacco.—Brooks v. Scott's Ex'r, 2 Munf. 344.

§ 47. Presumptions and burden of proof.

[a] (Cal. 1861) In an action for work and labor, where defendant denies a portion of the items alleged, the burden is on plaintiff to establish the same.—Caulfield v. Sanders, 17 Cal. 569.

[b] (Cal. 1890) On a quantum meruit for services defendant has the burden of proving a special contract as to time and price under which he alleges the work was done.—Pendleton v. Cline, 85 Cal. 142, 24 Pac. 659.

[c] (Ill. 1871) When plaintiff declares generally for work and labor done and materials furnished, and defendant files the general issue, with notice that he will insist on the trial that the work was performed under a written contract, the burden of proof is not thrown upon plaintiff to show an abandonment of the special contract until defendant has proved the averment in his notice.—Robinson v. Parish, 62 Ill. 130.

[d] (Mich. 1879) In an action on the common counts for labor performed, to which the general issue was pleaded, the burden was on plaintiff to show that he did the work, and the contract under which it was done; and an instruction was properly refused that, "if plaintiff has proved his services at defendant's request he has established a prima facie case, and the burden is on defendant to show the work was done under special contract, and not as claimed by plaintiff."—Berringer v. Lake Superior Iron Co., 41 Mich. 305, 2 N. W. 18.

[e] (Pa. 1883) An aged lady resided with her nephew for a considerable period prior to her death. Settlements were made monthly for her board, except for the month running at her death. On her decease, the wife of the nephew presented a claim for nursing during her sickness. Held that, as no claim was made prior to her death, the presumption was that the settlements were in full of all demands.—In re Springer's Estate, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 44.

[f] (Pa. 1883) Where a claim for services is against the estate of a decedent, and the evidence does not show a demand in his lifetime, there is a presumption of payment.—In re Dunwoody's Estate, 40 Leg. Int. 416.

[g] (Pa. 1883) Where a claimant has rendered services to a decedent, and no demand has been made for a long period of time, the law presumes a payment.—In re Kelly's Estate, 14 Wkly. Notes Cas. 423.

[h] (Pa. 1887) Where claims for services alleged to have been rendered are delayed in their presentation as legal demands until after the death of the alleged debtor, every fair intendment will be made against them.—In re Hollin's Estate, 44 Leg. Int. 48.

§ 48. —— Consideration for and purpose of services, and relations between parties.

[a] (Cal. 1863) The legal presumption that a person enjoying the benefit of another's services is bound to pay for them may be rebutted by proof of a special agreement to pay therefor in a particular manner, or that the services were intended to be gratuitous, or even by particular circumstances, from which the law would raise the counter presumption that the services were not intended to be a charge against the party benefited thereby.—Moulin v. Columbet, 22 Cal. 508.

[b] (Ill. 1878) There is no legal presumption of an intent to charge for services rendered, or to be charged for those received, by one who goes to live in another's family with the understanding that he is to go and come and work as he pleases, and be treated and entertained as a member of the family.—Dunlap v. Allen, 90 Ill. 108.

[c] (Ill. 1879) Where services are rendered at the request of another, the burden of proof falls on the party who declares that by agreement there was to be no compensation.—Doggett v. Ream, 5 Ill. App. (5 Bradw.) 174.

[d] (Ill. 1891) Where there is no relationship between parties, one of whom performs a service for the other, the presumption is that it is to be paid for, and the burden will be upon the one receiving the service to show that it was agreed to be performed without remuneration.—Linn v. Linderoth, 40 Ill. App. 320.

[e] (Ill. 1896) In an action for work, labor, and services performed, the party affirming that a certain compensation was agreed upon for such work, labor, and services has the burden of proving the same.—Howard v. Gobel, 62 Ill. App. 497; Gobel v. Howard, Id.

[f] (La.) Services, proved to have been useful and laborious, rendered to a sick person by a nurse, who visited him at his request, defraying herself the expenses of conveyance to his residence, will not be presumed to have been gratuitous.—(1844) McManus v. Lemee, 9 Rob. 115; (1846) Camfrancq v. Pilie, 1 La. Ann. 197.

[g] (Me. 1869) Where valuable services are rendered for another at his request or with his consent, he has the burden of proof where he affirms, to avoid payment therefor, that they were a gratuity, or that the person performed them only with the expectation that he would receive a portion of the other's property by will.—Rumrill v. Adams, 57 Me. 565.

[h] (Neb. 1881) In an action for work and labor, the answer admitted the performance of the same, but alleged that the services were to be rendered gratuitously. Held, that the burden was on defendant to prove that all the services were gratuitous.—Ewarth v. Nier, 11 Neb. 441, 9 N. W. 569.

[i, j] (Pa. 1870) Where a child claims services against his father's estate, the presumption is against him, and the onus is on the child to show a contract to pay wages.—Titman's Adm'r v. Titman, 64 Pa. (14 P. F. Smith) 480.

[k] (Pa. 1878) The implied assumpsit to pay for the performance of labor may be rebutted by any proof that shows an intention to give and receive without compensation, without regard to the mere question of relationship.—In re Cousty's Estate, 35 Leg. Int. 198.

[l] (Pa. 1880) Though relationship, except in case of parent and child, does not itself rebut the presumption that a promise to pay is intended where personal services are rendered, it tends to rebut such presumption, and, if accompanied by other evidence, is sufficient.—Appeal of Horton, 94 Pa. 62.

[m] (Pa. 1881) Where a person serves in the capacity of a servant, and no demand for wages is made for a considerable period after such service, the presumption is that the wages have been paid, or that the service was to be performed without pay.—Appeal of McConnell, 97 Pa. 31.

[n] (Pa. 1881) An executor made a claim against the estate for services rendered the testator. The claimant was a son-in-law of the testator, in his employ, and in the employ of the firm of which the testator was the principal partner, at an adequate salary, and lived in a house of the testator without rent, and made no claim for the services during the testator's life. Held, that any presumption that the services were rendered on a promise of payment was strongly rebutted.—Appeal of Welch, 1 Penny. 9.

[nn] (Pa. 1884) Where no demand is made for 20 years by a sister of a brother for services in furnishing him board, there can be no presumption that any compensation was intended.—In re Picken's Estate, 14 Wkly. Notes Cas. 407.

[o] (Pa. 1885) Where a claim is made for wages, and there is no evidence of any demand in the lifetime of the alleged debtor, it will be presumed that the services were rendered gratuitously, or that payment was made as it became due.—In re Larkin's Estate, 16 Wkly. Notes Cas. 541.

[p] (S. C. 1848) In an action of general indebitatus assumpsit for services rendered defendant's testatrix in her lifetime, the law will not presume a promise to bequeath a legacy to plaintiff in payment of such services.—Hunter v. Hunter, 3 Strob. 321.

[q] (Vt. 1883) Where one living in defendant's family as a member thereof left the same with an agreement that the family relations had ceased, and in a few weeks returned and resumed the relations formerly existing, and afterwards sued defendant for household services performed on her return, the burden is on her to produce evidence enough to establish an express contract on the part of defendant to pay therefor, and to overcome the presumption that she was at work for her support.—Ashley v. Hendee, 56 Vt. 209.

[r] (Wis. 1891) Where a contract did not provide compensation for certain services separate from those for which compensation was provided, the burden is on the person receiving the benefit of such services to show that they were to be performed gratuitously.—Link v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 80 Wis. 304, 50 N. W. 335.

§ 49. —— Rebuttal of presumptions arising from relations between parties.

[a] (Md. 1893) Appellant had lived with her grandfather since she was four years old, and after majority continued in his family, rendering the same services as before. He never paid her any wages, nor promised her any. Two witnesses testified that he had said he intended to pay her, and would see her well paid. Litigation having arisen respecting his estate during his life, she accepted a settlement with the rest of the heirs, but afterwards filed a claim for wages for over nine years. Though her grandfather was still alive, she obtained no indorsement of the claim from him. Held, that she had not overcome the presumption that her services were gratuitous.—Bixler v. Sellman, 77 Md. 494, 27 Atl. 137.

[b] (Mo. 1888) Where the persons occupy a family relation, as that of father and son, the presumption of law is against the existence of a contract to pay for services rendered, and to overcome such presumption and establish the contrary the evidence must be clear and satisfactory.—Woods v. Land, 30 Mo. App. 176.

[c] (N. Y. 1867) When a relative, more distant than a child, goes to live with a person at his request, the presumption that such relative lives with the person as a member of the family, and not as a servant, is less strong than in the case of a child; and slight circumstances will be sufficient to overcome it.—Thornton v. Grange, 66 Barb. 507.

[d] (N. Y. 1894) The presumption that services rendered to decedent in his last illness by his daughter were gratuitous is overcome where it appears that the daughter was married, and at the beginning of her father's sickness left her home, and at his request stayed with him until he died, and he said that she should be paid for it.—In re Strickland's Estate (Sur.) 10 Misc. Rep. 486, 32 N. Y. Supp. 171.

[e] (N. C. 1887) Where a grandfather takes his granddaughter into his family, a presumption arises against a promise to pay for the services performed, and such presumption is not overthrown by occasional declarations of the grandfather that she was a good girl and should be paid for her services.—Dodson v. McAdams, 96 N. C. 149, 2 S. E. 453, 60 Am. Rep. 408.

§ 50. Admissibility.

[a] (U. S. 1803) The plaintiff's own oath is not evidence in an action for work and labor, unless made within one year from the date of the articles charged.—Farrell v. Knapp, Fed. Cas. No. 4,684 [1 Cranch, C. C. 131].

[b] (Cal. 1891) A tenant, in an action against his landlord for money expended and work done, testified that he was induced to go on the land by the verbal promise of the landlord that he would give him a five-year lease, and that after his removal he refused to execute it, but told him to go on and cultivate the land, and that he would pay him for the work. Held not inadmissible, as proving a lease for more than one year that is not in writing, where the tenant claimed nothing under a lease, and the testimony was intended only to explain how he came to be upon the land.—Salle v. Mayer, 91 Cal. 165, 27 Pac. 513.

[c] (Ill. 1844) Defendant contracted to sell certain land, and bound himself to make certain improvements. Having failed to make such improvements, the matter was submitted to arbitrators, and an award was made, and defendant, refusing to comply therewith, sued in ejectment and dispossessed plaintiffs. The plaintiffs sued defendant in assumpsit on the common counts for work and labor and for money lent, and to recover back the payments they had made on the original contract, on the ground that it was abandoned. Held, that the proceedings in the ejectment suit were admissible to show an abandonment of the contract by the defendant.—Bannister v. Read, 6 Ill. (1 Gilman) 92.

[d] (Ill. 1895) Plaintiffs, who had purchased a machine for sinking wells, brought an action to recover for services in sinking a well, it appearing that the well was the first one sunk with the new machine. Held, that evidence showing that when the machine was bought they made offers to put down the first well for the cost of the tubing and pump was competent.—Devine v. McMillan, 61 Ill. App. 571.

[e] (Iowa, 1895) Where defendant, in an action by a minor for services, alleges that the services were to be paid for by his care and education of plaintiff, evidence as to amount of clothing furnished, of plaintiff's ability for work, and the amount and quality of his work, is admissible.—Resso v. Lehan, 96 Iowa, 45, 64 N. W. 689.

[f] (Iowa, 1895) Where one who took a minor to live in his family is sued by the minor for services, evidence as to how long plaintiff was with the person from whom defendant received him, what efforts had been made to get him a home, and whether plaintiff considered himself defendant's adopted son, are immaterial.—Resso v. Lehan, 96 Iowa, 45, 64 N. W. 689.

[g] (Iowa, 1895) In an action by a minor for services, evidence that defendant promised to give plaintiff a sum of money, and a team and harness, if he continued to live with him till a certain time, is admissible to show that he expected to pay for plaintiff's services.—Resso v. Lehan, 96 Iowa, 45, 64 N. W. 689.

[h] (Md. 1889) In an action on the common counts by a man of limited means against the executors of a wealthy person to recover for services during a period of 25 years, on which nothing had been paid, defendants may show that plaintiff, at a time when testator owed him a large sum, applied to testator for, and obtained, on behalf of his firm, a loan of less than half the amount he asserted to be due him, for which he gave the firm note, with interest.—Stoner v. Devilbiss, 70 Md. 144, 16 Atl. 440.

[i] (Md. 1889) The exclusion of evidence that testator had good business qualifications, and was strong, mentally and physically, is not error, where plaintiff does not rely on proof to the contrary to establish his employment, and one of his own witnesses has testified to the same facts.—Stoner v. Devilbiss, 70 Md. 144, 16 Atl. 440.

[j] (Md. 1889) Evidence that said firm was indebted, during the time said services were rendered, to others besides defendants' testator, is incompetent.—Stoner v. Devilbiss, 70 Md. 144, 16 Atl. 440.

[k] (Mass. 1855) In an action for work and labor a timebook kept by defendant of the days on which the plaintiff worked is not admissible, with defendant's suppletory oath, to show that the plaintiff did not work on certain days.—Morse v. Potter, 70 Mass. (4 Gray) 292.

[l] (Mass. 1861) In an action to recover the price of labor, in which the defense is that the labor was performed on the credit of a third person, evidence of an offer by such third person, after the commencement of the action, to pay the plaintiff for the same, is incompetent.—Larry v. Sherburne, 84 Mass. (2 Allen) 34.

[m] (Mich. 1867) Plaintiff, having maintained for some years a set of range lights and stakes on certain flats to aid vessels in navigating a channel, relying on such compensation as he could obtain from vessel owners, brought suit against defendant for the value of such services rendered to his tugboat for the season of 1864, and offered evidence that defendant was the owner of steam tugs engaged in towing vessels through such channel, and had paid $25 for the use of such lights for the season of 1863. Held, that the testimony relating to the payment by defendant of the $25 was competent, as it tended to show that defendant had been fully informed at to the nature of plaintiff's services, and had acknowledged their value and a willingness to pay for them.—Strong v. Saunders, 15 Mich. 339.

[n] (Mich. 1890) In a suit for services on defendant's farm, in the absence of testimony to show how much of the work of clearing the farm was done by plaintiff, it was error to allow him to state how much clearing was done on defendant's farm while he was there.—Alderton v. Wright, 81 Mich. 294, 45 N. W. 968.

[o] (Nev. 1872) In an action for labor performed for an association of lessees of a mill, leases and contracts under which the lessees prosecuted the work are admissible in evidence to show the character of the association and establish their interest in the labor on which the plaintiff was employed.—Fulton v. Day, 8 Nev. 80.

[p] (N. H. 1875) In assumpsit to recover the price of manufacturing shoes, in which it appears that defendant had never directly employed plaintiff, nor held out any person as his agent, but that a third person carried the materials to plaintiff, and employed him to manufacture the shoes and return them to defendant, the latter may properly be permitted to show that he employed such third person to manufacture the shoes for him, and paid him therefor.—Caverly v. Balcom, 55 N. H. 566.

[q] (N. J. 1859) In an action to recover for services rendered in attending a horse, evidence that plaintiff had claimed and received an interest in the earnings of the horse is competent.—Dennis v. Van Vay, 28 N. J. Law (4 Dutch.) 158.

[r] (N. J. 1864) In an action for services in keeping a horse, against two persons as joint owners, evidence that the shoeing of the horse has been charged to one of the defendants alone by a third person is not admissible to prove that there is no joint liability.—Dennis v. Van Voy, 31 N. J. Law (2 Vroom) 38.

[s] (N. Y. 1888) In an action against a father's executors to recover for work, it appeared that plaintiff lived for many years with his family on the farm and in the house of his father; that he worked some on the farm, but was away the larger portion of the time; that he built additions to the house, and occupied them himself, and paid for many articles brought to and used on the farm; and that he ate at his father's table most of the time, furnishing much of the provisions, and paid his father for the produce of the farm while residing thereon. Held that, as he failed to establish a promise of payment, the questions as to how much and whose money he expended for the benefit of the testator were immaterial, and were properly excluded.—Havens v. Havens, 50 Hun, 605, 3 N. Y. Supp. 219.

[t] (N. Y. 1891) In an action for repairs to the engine of defendant's yacht made at the request of its engineer, where the engineer has testified that he returned the first bill rendered by plaintiff for corrections, which were made so that the bill as rendered the second time was correct, it is not error to allow him to testify that an indorsement on the face of it to that effect was in his handwriting.—Avery v. Starbuck, 127 N. Y. 675, 27 N. E. 1080, affirming (1889) 57 N. Y. Super. Ct. (25 Jones & S.) 597, 5 N. Y. Supp. 779.

[u] (N. Y. 1895) In an action to charge defendant with the value of services rendered on premises in possession of defendant's lessee, the lease is admissible to show the relation of defendant to the premises, and to the work done by plaintiff.—Miller v. Lawrence (Com. Pl.) 13 Misc. Rep. 130, 34 N. Y. Supp. 161.

§ 51. —— Gratuitous services and relations between parties.

[a] (Ill. 1892) In an action by a divorced wife for services rendered her husband after the divorce, where the defense is that they were rendered gratuitously, evidence that a son of the parties living with the husband asked her to come and do the housework is admissible on showing that the son acted with his father's knowledge and consent.—Fagan v. Fagan, 46 Ill. App. 202.

[b] (Ind. 1885) Where a woman sues a claim for services, consisting of nursing her father-in-law, evidence that she and her husband lived in the father's house as members of his family is admissible.—Johnson v. Johnson, 100 Ind. 389.

[c] (Iowa, 1887) In an action against an executor to recover for work and labor performed by plaintiff for her deceased father after she had attained her majority, the will of the decedent, executed after the alleged services had been performed, showing that the testator had bequeathed to each of his children, including plaintiff, a certain sum, and the balance of his estate to grandchildren, is not admissible to show that decedent had no intent or expectation to pay the plaintiff for her services.—Cowan v. Musgrave, 73 Iowa, 384, 35 N. W. 496.

[d] (Mass. 1895) Where, in an action for services rendered, defendant sets up that the services were gratuitous, plaintiff may show that when he entered on the work he was engaged in a business in which he was earning from $3 to $10 a day, and that he expected to be paid.—Nickerson v. Spindell, 164 Mass. 25, 41 N. E. 105.

[e] (Mich. 1882) To show that services rendered to a city were gratuitous, evidence is not admissible that the person rendering the services did not make claim for compensation to persons who were without authority to pay him or to make a binding agreement that he should be paid.—McBride v. Grand Rapids, 49 Mich. 239, 13 N. W. 581.

[f] (Mich. 1889) In an action of assumpsit for services by a stepdaughter against her stepmother, evidence that plaintiff did not know that she was entitled to her wages after she came of age is incompetent.—Feiertag v. Feiertag, 73 Mich. 297, 41 N. W. 414.

[g] (Mo. 1883) In an action for services by one who was claimed by the defense to have rendered them as a member of the family, the will of the head of the family, leaving plaintiff considerable property, is admissible in support of the claim.—Cowell v. Roberts' Ex'r, 79 Mo. 218.

[h] (N. H. 1895) In an action for services, where plaintiff claimed that defendant promised to pay therefor, and defendant claimed that the services were rendered without expectation of payment, evidence may be admitted of the extent of defendant's farm, for the purpose of showing the necessity of his employing assistants.—Mudgett v. Emerson, 67 N. H. 234, 30 Atl. 343.

[i] (N. Y. 1890) In an action for services rendered by plaintiff to her deceased grandfather, declarations of decedent that plaintiff "had not been paid, but should be paid," are admissible in connection with the evidence of the original request for such services.—Walters v. Mayhew, 55 Hun, 612, 8 N. Y. Supp. 771.

[j] (Vt. 1844) In an action for services rendered by a daughter to her father, the last will of the father, together with a prior one executed by him, each containing bequests to the plaintiff, are admissible in evidence to show the understanding of the parties as to payment, in connection with evidence of admissions made by the plaintiff that no contract was made in relation to the services and no account kept, and that she was satisfied with the provision made for her by the will.—Fitch v. Peckham, 16 Vt. 150.

Evidence of value of services in general, see "Evidence," vol. 20, cc. 356-360, §§ 254, 255.
Expert evidence, see "Evidence," vol. 20, cc. 3382, 3383, § 2331.
Opinion evidence, see "Evidence," vol. 20, cc. 3283, 3284, § 2272.

[a, b] (Colo. 1896) In an action for work and labor, on an issue as to the value of services, the employer's testimony as to what such services would be worth in the community was properly rejected.—Andrews v. Johnston, 7 Colo. App. 551, 44 Pac. 73.

[c] (Conn. 1848) In assumpsit for labor and materials furnished in building a house for defendant, defendant claimed that the labor and materials were furnished under a special contract, and it appeared that a bill of particulars exhibited by plaintiff referred to such contract. Held, that evidence on plaintiff's behalf to prove the value of the labor and materials was admissible on the question of damages.—Bishop v. Perkins, 19 Conn. 300.

[d] (Conn. 1874) Where plaintiff sued for services in purchasing a mill for the defendant, and he was not a real estate broker, and no agreement was made as to the amount of his compensation, in an action for work and labor to recover what the services were reasonably worth, the evidence of a real estate broker as to the commission that he charged for such a service, and as to what he would have charged in the case at issue, was admissible.—Elting v. Sturtevant, 41 Conn. 176.

[e] (Iowa, 1882) In an action for work and labor performed, the usual and customary price of the labor can only be shown by evidence of the wages actually paid at the same time and place for similar labor, either under express or implied contracts; and an instruction to the effect that proof of such contracts would not establish the reasonable value of plaintiff's labor was properly refused.—Jenks v. Knotts Mexican Silver Min. Co., 58 Iowa, 549, 12 N. W. 588.

[f] (Iowa, 1888) In a suit for the reasonable worth of services on a farm, evidence showing how much stock and how large a farm the defendant had is not competent.—Stanley v. Barringer, 74 Iowa, 34, 36 N. W. 877.

[g] (Iowa, 1896) Evidence that plaintiff boarded himself when he worked for intervener is admissible on the value of the services performed for intervener.—Kassing v. Walter, 65 N. W. 832.

[h] (Kan. 1893) In an action for services rendered, in order that a witness may testify as to the value of such services, their rendition need not be conclusively shown; but it is sufficient if there is evidence tending to establish the claim.—St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Kirkpatrick, 52 Kan. 104, 34 Pac. 400.

[i] (Ky. 1809) On a quantum meruit for services as a clerk, evidence of what other clerks had received for similar services is admissible.—Murray v. Ware's Adm'r, 4 Ky. (1 Bibb) 325, 4 Am. Dec. 637.

[j] (Ky. 1832) On a quantum meruit for services, evidence of what a third person charges is not competent, as the inquiry should be directed to the value of the services rendered by such person.—French v. Frazer's Adm'r, 30 Ky. (7 J. J. Marsh.) 425.

[k, l] (Ky. 1895) On an issue as to the value of plaintiff's services performed in repairing machinery sold by defendant to an ice company, testimony by the president of the ice company as to the loss sustained by it by reason of defendant's failure to repair the machinery prior to plaintiff's employment, and that plaintiff successfully repaired the machinery, is competent.—Hercules Iron Works v. Dugan, 33 S. W. 204.

[m] (Md. 1892) In an action for a balance due for work and materials, defendants offered to prove that persons of experience had made estimates in writing of what their price would be for similar work and materials, which was much less than that charged by plaintiff. Held, that the estimates were properly excluded.—Morris v. Columbian Iron Works & Dry Dock Co., 76 Md. 354, 25 Atl. 417, 17 L. R. A. 851.

[n] (Mass. 1810) On a quantum meruit count for services, an offer of defendant to pay a certain sum to any one who would perform them is proper evidence for ascertaining what is a reasonable compensation.—Symmes v. Frazier, 6 Mass. 344, 4 Am. Dec. 142.

[o] (Mass. 1865) In an action to recover for labor in erecting a building, evidence of the comparative value of the services of an architect and joiner is incompetent.—Shepard v. Ashley, 92 Mass. (10 Allen) 542.

[oo] (Mich. 1882) Plaintiff agreed to work for defendant for specified wages and "good farmer's living," as long as the parties should agree. Held, that plaintiff, in a suit on the common counts to recover for his services, might show the value of the services rendered and the quality of the living.—Shulters v. Searls, 48 Mich. 550, 12 N. W. 697.

[p] (Mich. 1885) In assumpsit for labor and materials furnished, evidence that plaintiff charged defendant therefor the same prices as he did others does not tend to prove the reasonable value of the work and materials.—Richmond v. Atkinson, 58 Mich. 413, 25 N. W. 328.

[pp] (Mich. 1887) In an action of assumpsit, when plaintiff gives evidence to prove that he had performed work and labor for defendant, it is proper to ask him how much his services were worth.—McDonald v. McDonald, 67 Mich. 122, 34 N. W. 276.

[q] (Mich. 1889) In an action of assumpsit for services by a stepdaughter against her stepmother, evidence as to what plaintiff earned at dressmaking before she came to live with her stepmother was incompetent.—Feiertag v. Feiertag, 73 Mich. 297, 41 N. W. 414.

[qq] (Mich. 1895) Where a conveyance of land by a father to his child for services is void, because it includes the homestead of the grantor, the value of the land is admissible to prove the value of the services.—Sammon v. Wood, 107 Mich. 506, 65 N. W. 529.

[r] (Mo. 1888) In an action to recover compensation for services rendered, where the evidence shows that no charge was intended when the services were performed, evidence of the value of such services, or of a custom among other persons having reference to compensation for them, is irrelevant.—Hoolan v. Bailey, 30 Mo. App. 585.

[rr] (Mo. 1894) In an action to recover on a quantum meruit for services in nursing a sick person, evidence of the loathsome nature of the disease is admissible in determining the compensation to be paid; but plaintiff is not entitled to show damages to his residence resulting from such disease.—Crowe v. Gallenkamp, 58 Mo. App. 396.

[s] (N. H. 1855) In an action for services in building a railroad, entries in the contractor's books of prices paid to his workmen are not evidence against him of the prices he was to receive. If the question is of the reasonable value of his services, they are admissible, because they tend to show the worth of one item of his claim; that is, of the labor employed.—Currier v. Boston & M. R., 31 N. H. (11 Fost.) 209.

[ss] (N. H. 1862) In assumpsit for nursing and taking care of defendant in sickness, it is material that plaintiff and his wife took the principal care, that plaintiff's wife was the principal nurse, that this care and treatment was kind and considerate, and that defendant was dangerously ill and in a critical situation; and evidence on these points is relevant.—Smith v. Smith, 43 N. H. 536.

[t] (N. H. 1864) Where the value of services in obtaining subscriptions to an enterprise is drawn in question in an action to recover for the labor performed, the correspondence between plaintiff and others interested in the subject was admissible as bearing on the extent of the services.—Low v. Connecticut & P. R. R., 45 N. H. 370.

[tt] (N. Y. 1850) A special agreement, made between a father and his minor daughter for services, where the daughter continued such services after her majority, whether void or not, is admissible upon the question of damages in a suit by the daughter against the executors of her father's estate to recover the value of such services.—Fort v. Gooding, 9 Barb. 371.

[u] (N. Y. 1871) In an action on a quantum meruit for services performed under a contract void by the statute of frauds, the rate of compensation fixed by the agreement during the whole term of the contract is not even prima facie evidence as to the value of the services, where at the commencement of the term of service the plaintiff was ignorant of the business in which he was employed, and ordinary skill therein was only acquired by instruction and practical experience for a considerable time.—Galvin v. Prentice, 45 N. Y. 162, 6 Am. Rep. 58.

[uu] (N. Y. 1873) In an action to recover for work and labor as a carpenter and joiner, it was not error to admit evidence tending to prove what the services of good carpenters and joiners were worth at the time and place of performing the work, and that plaintiff was a good and fast workman, as he was presumptively entitled, in the absence of any special agreement as to the rate of wages, to recover according to the ruling price of wages at the time and place for workmen of like character.—Major v. Spies, 66 Barb. 576.

[v] (N. Y. 1887) In an action for the value of services as a nurse, evidence of a scale of charges for nursing, fixed by the nurses of a hospital in the city where plaintiff's services were rendered, is inadmissible.—De Witt v. De Witt, 46 Hun, 258.

[vv] (N. Y. 1896) Evidence as to the amount of profits earned by plaintiff in his own business while attending to defendant's business was immaterial.—Wiley v. Goodsell, 3 App. Div. 452, 38 N. Y. Supp. 376.

[w] (Ohio, 1894) In an action to recover on a quantum meruit for the value of services, evidence of the pecuniary condition of defendant, in that he was a very wealthy man, was not competent, unless it would show that the usual price varies with the ability to pay for the service.—Saffin v. Thomas, 4 O. C. D. 438.

[ww] (Ohio, 1895) In an action for services as a housekeeper, evidence of the declarations of defendant as to the compensation he intended to give the plaintiff is admissible to show the value of the services.—Berry v. Collins, 9 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 656.

[x] (Ohio, 1895) In an action for services rendered as a housekeeper, evidence as to the bad condition and insufficient accommodations of the house is admissible as affecting the question of the value of the services.—Berry v. Collins, 9 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 656.

[xx] (Pa. 1844) In an action to recover for labor done, in the absence of proof of a specific contract as to the price, proof of what others received for the same kind of labor is competent.—Holman v. Fesler, 7 Watts & S. 313.

[y] (Pa. 1872) In an action for services for nursing, it is proper to ask a witness whether plaintiff's appearance did not show her constitution to be broken down by her duties, since, if the services performed were of such a character as were injurious to plaintiff's health, it was a fair element to be considered in determining what her services were worth.—Thompson v. Stevens, 71 Pa. (21 P. F. Smith) 161.

[yy] (Pa. 1879) In the absence of any agreement as to the price to be paid for services, evidence of their value is competent.—In re Wells' Estate, 13 Phila. 250.

[z] (S. C. 1892) In an action for the balance of an account for laying brick in building a mill, and for superintending the building of a smokestack of such mill, on the issue as to the value of plaintiff's services on the smokestack defendant can show the difference in price per thousand paid for laying bricks in the smokestack and in the mill.—McGee v. Wells, 37 S. C. 365, 16 S. E. 29.

[zz] (Tex. 1848) In an action for work and labor by a carpenter, he charged his work by the day, and proved his skill as a workman and the customary price paid for carpenter's work by the day. Held, that under such circumstances the defendant could offer evidence to show that, from the plaintiff's habits respecting his industry, his work was not worth as much per day as other carpenters.—Yeiser v. Ward, 3 Tex. 430.

§ 53. —— Special contract.

[a] (Cal. 1894) Where the contractor sues on quantum meruit, because of the contract having been wrongfully rescinded, the contract is admissible in evidence as proof of the value of the work, but is not conclusive on that point.—Adams v. Burbank, 103 Cal. 646, 37 Pac. 640.

[aa] (Colo. 1890) In an action for work and labor performed, it appeared that plaintiff was in the employ of one M., who had agreed to pay him $3.50 per day, and that M. made an assignment, and his wife, the defendant, purchased the stock at the sheriff's sale, and continued the business in her name, with her husband as her agent. Plaintiff continued to labor for her, charging the same price per day for such labor, which was paid. Held, on a dispute subsequently arising as to wages, defendant claiming that the contract with her husband was not binding on her, that plaintiff was properly allowed to testify to the contract with defendant's husband, made prior to the time that she succeeded to the business.—McQuown v. Cavanaugh, 14 Colo. 188, 23 Pac. 341.

[b] (Ill. 1842) In an action by two for work and labor done and materials furnished, a written contract, signed by one of the plaintiffs and all the defendants, for the performance of the same labor, is admissible as a memorandum or proposition of what the defendants considered it worth.—Reed v. Phillips, 5 Ill. (4 Scam.) 39.

[c] (Ill. 1889) In an action of assumpsit to recover for services rendered on an express contract, questions as to the gross cost of doing the work are irrelevant.—Anheuser-Busch Brewing Co. v. Hutmacher, 127 Ill. 652, 21 N. E. 626, 4 L. R. A. 575, affirming (1870) 29 Ill. App. 316.

[d] (Ind. 1886) In an action upon the common count for work and labor done, evidence as to an agreement by defendant to pay for certain work at a certain price may be admissible, as tending to show the reasonable value of the work.—Scott v. Congdon, 106 Ind. 268, 6 N. E. 625.

[e] (Ind. 1891) In a proceeding to establish a claim against an estate for personal services rendered to the decedent, where it appears that the claimant was the decedent's niece, and a member of his family, evidence that she went to live with the decedent on account of his promise to make a will in her favor is admissible in order to rebut the presumption that her services were rendered gratuitously, although the promise was not kept, and was void under the statute of frauds.—Nelson v. Masterson, 2 Ind. App. 524, 28 N. E. 731.

[f] (Ind. 1895) In an action on the quantum meruit for services in effecting a sale, an agreement allowing plaintiff "the usual commission of from 10 to 15 per cent." is admissible to prove the value of the services.—Jenney Electric Co. v. Branham, 145 Ind. 314, 41 N. E. 448, 33 L. R. A. 395.

[ff] (La. 1832) A contract to perform work, afterwards so altered as to require double the quantity of materials, is admissible to establish the value of the work.—Courcelle v. Lausans, 3 La. 361.

[g] (Mo. 1885) In an action for the reasonable value of his services, evidence of a special contract to pay for the services at a certain rate is admissible.—Crump v. Rebstock, 20 Mo. App. 37; Floerke v. Teuscher Distilling Co., Id. 76.

[h] (Neb. 1889) In an action upon the quantum meruit for compensation for services performed upon the request of the defendant, which employment is denied by such defendant, it is not error to permit the plaintiff to testify that the defendant represented that the services would be worth a certain sum, and that he would guaranty the payment of that sum, etc., the offer as to price not having been accepted by the plaintiff. Such evidence does not tend to establish an express contract as to the price to be paid.—Walker v. Turner, 27 Neb. 103, 42 N. W. 918.

[i] (Neb. 1896) In an action for work and labor performed under a special contract, the defense alleged was that such services were, by agreement, performed as an equivalent for the plaintiff's board and lodging during the period named. Held, that evidence that, on or about the date of the agreement alleged by the defendant, a third person, in defendant's presence, offered to employ plaintiff for wages, was rightly admitted on the reasonableness of plaintiff's claim, and corroborative of his testimony.—Blomgren v. Anderson, 48 Neb. 240, 67 N. W. 186.

[j] (Ohio, 1851) Where persons agree on the 18th of April, in writing, to perform certain work by August 1st, and the written contract is signed by the parties, and is also signed by a surety as such, for the performance of the work, and afterwards the work, having been commenced, is suspended at the instance of the party for whom it was contracted to be done, with the intention not to have the work completed, and again resumed, a month after the time fixed by the contract for the completion of the work, at the instance of the party for whom the work was by the contract to be done, upon his promise to pay, over and above the contract price, the additional cost of the work, in consequence of an increase in the price of wages and materials, and, the work being finished in January following, suit is brought, not on the contract, but for the work and labor, the original contract is competent evidence for the plaintiffs, and it is no objection that the surety is not a party plaintiff.—Kugler v. Wiseman, 20 Ohio, 361.

[k] (Pa. 1866) Where, in assumpsit to recover the value of work and labor and material furnished by the plaintiff, there was a special contract, it should first have been proved, and then the fact showing its alteration or abandonment, and the latter was not properly admissible as rebutting testimony.—Boyle v. McKinley, 6 Phila. 172.

[l] (S. C. 1844) In assumpsit, plaintiff's first witness testified that defendant had made a written contract with a third person, under which the work of plaintiff was to be done, and that defendant asked plaintiff to do the work. Held, that plaintiff was not obliged to produce the written agreement, which was not in his possession, but might prove what the work was aliunde.—Coles v. Holmes, 2 Speers, 360.

[m] (S. C. 1848) In an action of assumpsit for services rendered defendant's testatrix in her lifetime, evidence of a promise to bequeath a legacy to plaintiff in payment thereof is not admissible.—Hunter v. Hunter, 3 Strob. 321.

[n] (Tex. 1891) In an action to recover for labor and material, it is not error to admit in evidence the contract by plaintiff with a subcontractor to do part of the work.—Maverick v. Maury, 79 Tex. 435, 15 S. W. 686.

[o] (Va. 1858) In an action of assumpsit on the common count for labor, a defendant has no right to arrest the plaintiff in the course of making out his case by an offer to show that the work was done under a special contract; it not having appeared, from anything proved by the plaintiff, that there was any such contract.—Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Polly, 14 Grat. 447; Same v. Lafferty's, Id. 478.

§ 54. —— Skill of plaintiff and sufficiency of performance.

[a] (Ga. 1885) In an action on account for services rendered in managing defendant's business for a number of years, it is proper to admit testimony tending to rebut plaintiff's claim of skill and efficiency in the management of the business and operations connected therewith.—Dalton v. Drake, 75 Ga. 115.

[b] (Mass. 1865) In an action to recover for labor in erecting a building, evidence of the general character and skill of the plaintiff as a workman is competent.—Shepard v. Ashley, 92 Mass. (10 Allen) 542.

[c] (N. H. 1843) Where a party seeks to recover the value of his labor, he may offer evidence to show that he possessed skill and experience in the particular trade or business in which he was employed; and to rebut this the other party may introduce evidence to show that the party rendering the service was habitually intemperate.—Cummings v. Nichols, 13 N. H. 420, 38 Am. Dec. 501.

[d] (N. J. 1840) In assumpsit for work and labor, it is competent for the defendant to show that the services have not been performed in the manner agreed upon.—Marshall v. Hann, 17 N. J. Law (2 Har.) 425.

[e] (N. Y. 1817) In an action for labor, the defendant may show that the work was not done faithfully, in order to reduce the amount of the plaintiff's recovery.—Grant v. Button, 14 Johns. 377.

[f] (Pa. 1852) In an action on the common counts for work and labor in the construction of a furnace, evidence that another furnace, constructed by the plaintiff according to his own plan, was unskillfully constructed, is not admissible as showing plaintiff's want of skill.—Waugh v. Shunk, 20 Pa. (8 Harris) 130.

§ 55. Weight and sufficiency of evidence.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence as to ownership of wife's earnings, see "Husband and Wife," vol. 26, cc. 2049, 2050, § 494.

—— of performance of services as to showing payment of debt, see "Payment," vol. 39, cc. 894, 895, § 235.

[a] (Ala. 1886) Defendant authorized plaintiff to do certain work, and agreed to pay him for it, provided "the King boys," three brothers living near by, would not do it. Plaintiff applied to one of the brothers, who refused to do the work. Held, that he must show that he applied to the others also, or an excuse for not doing so, such as their absence, or known unwillingness to do the work, and that the statement of the one brother to him that one of the others was away, and that the third would not do it, was incompetent.—Jackson v. Bush, 82 Ala. 396, 1 South. 175.

[b] (Ala. 1890) In a suit for work and labor done under a contract to milk defendant's cows and care for his stock, where defendant pleads as set-off damages for loss of stock through plaintiff's neglect, testimony of defendant and other witnesses that, in their opinion, the cattle died because of plaintiff's neglect, without stating particular acts of neglect, is not sufficient to sustain the plea.—Krou v. Verkentoren, 90 Ala. 113, 7 South. 428.

[c] (Ala. 1891) In assumpsit by a detective against a railroad company for services in ferreting out thefts from defendant's cars, a letter written by defendant's superintendent to the detective, stating that proof that the car breakers stole defendant's goods would have to be furnished before defendant would pay any bill, was not at variance with his testimony that by the contract compensation was contingent upon the arrest and conviction of thieves who had stolen from defendant's cars.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Morgan, 95 Ala. 608, 10 South. 834.

[d] (Cal. 1859) In a suit to recover for services for half a year under a contract to work a whole year, some proof of a promise on the part of defendant to settle with plaintiff is sufficient evidence of an agreement to apportion the contract to sustain a verdict for plaintiff.—Hogan v. Titlow, 14 Cal. 255.

[e] (Cal. 1892) Where a written contract for furnishing materials and erecting buildings is void for failure to record it, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, and the party furnishing such materials and erecting such buildings brings an action on an implied contract for the value thereof, such unrecorded contract is not conclusive evidence of the value of the labor and materials.—Rebman v. San Gabriel Valley Land & Water Co., 95 Cal. 390, 30 Pac. 564.

[f] (Cal. 1895) In assumpsit for the value of services in permanent improvements of a vineyard, defendant admitted the improvements, but claimed that they were made by plaintiff as lessee. There was evidence that defendant persuaded plaintiff, his son-in-law, to take the vineyard instead of leasing other land, saying that he did not know whether any profit could be made out of it or not, but that plaintiff would lose nothing by it; that he told plaintiff and others that he intended to give the vineyard to his daughter, and advised plaintiff to make improvements; that, until the death of his wife, plaintiff worked part of the time for defendant, but most of the time in improving the vineyard, paying out above receipts $2,900; that, after the death of the wife, defendant demanded $1,000 for rent, and that plaintiff leave the premises with all the improvements. Held, that plaintiff should recover for his services and the improvements.—Buhman v. Becker, 42 Pac. 28.

[g] (Ill. 1872) In an action against a railroad company to recover for work done, it appeared that the contract for the work was made by one acting as agent of the company, that plaintiff did the work and the company afterwards made beneficial use of it, that the chief engineer laid out the work, and that an assistant engineer signed a voucher therefor, naming plaintiff as contractor. Held, that the facts were sufficient to establish an implied promise to pay what the work was reasonably worth.—Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. Co. v. Wilcox, 66 Ill. 417.

[h] (Ill. 1895) In an action for work done, evidence of the foreman of the men who were employed that he went to the place where the men were at work, in the morning, and again in the afternoon, nearly every day, to see what they had done, and made up the account of their work from time sheets furnished by the men themselves, was insufficient to show the amount of labor actually performed.—Noonan v. Spoor, Mackey & Co., 61 Ill. App. 232.

[i] (Ill. 1895) In an action for services rendered, where the defendant alleged that plaintiff lived with him as a member of his family, and was not entitled to payment for services, evidence that defendant charged plaintiff, in his books of account, with money obtained from him for clothing and other necessaries, is sufficient to rebut the allegation that plaintiff was a member of the family.—Miller v. Cinnamon, 61 Ill. App. 429.

[j] (Iowa, 1888) In an action for services rendered on a farm, when plaintiff testifies that during the time he worked for defendant he had a good home, good and sufficient clothing, medicine, and doctor's attendance, and had spending money, and that when he left he was satisfied with what he had got, a verdict in favor of plaintiff is against the evidence.—Stanley v. Barringer, 74 Iowa, 34, 36 N. W. 877.

[k] (Kan. 1887) In an action of assumpsit for services by a niece against her uncle, evidence that defendant charged plaintiff for the time she was absent from her ordinary work, and with articles of clothing furnished her, and with other items, tends to show that he regarded and treated her as a servant, as distinguished from a relative living in the family.—Shane v. Smith, 37 Kan. 55, 14 Pac. 477.

[l] (Ky. 1889) Where, in an action for services rendered the defendant, with whom plaintiff lived from the time she was 15 until she reached her majority, the evidence is sufficient to authorize the submission to the jury of the question whether the services were rendered without expectation of payment, a verdict for the plaintiff will not be set aside as against the evidence.—Meith v. Stuckenborg, 11 Ky. Law Rep. 235.

[m] (La. 1869) Distinct proof of valuable services rendered and accepted should be required from an agent who seeks to recover compensation without proving any express employment.—Wood v. McCranie, 21 La. Ann. 557.

[n] (Me. 1863) A party cannot recover under a general count for labor performed under a contract, unless he proves that he attempted in good faith, and did all he reasonably could, to perform it in all respects, or some sufficient reason for the want of performance.—Veazie v. City of Bangor, 51 Me. 509.

[o] (Me. 1879) Circumstantial evidence is sufficient to prove a request, so as to enable a person to recover on an implied contract for services rendered.—Hill v. Packard, 69 Me. 158.

[oo] (Mass. 1886) In an action for labor and services rendered, where plaintiff seeks to recover what they are reasonably worth, he cannot do so if the whole evidence leaves it in doubt whether they were not gratuitously rendered. Defendant, by asserting that they were so rendered, and offering to prove it by legal evidence to that effect, meets the prima facie case of plaintiff, and the issue is then to be determined upon the whole evidence.—Phipps v. Mahon, 141 Mass. 471, 5 N. E. 835.

[p] (Minn. 1873) A schedule to a complaint for work and labor done contained an item for 2,800 yards of excavation done in January, 1869. Plaintiff testified that the work was to be measured by the engineer of the railroad company. His measure was to be taken as correct, and he was to be paid according to such estimate;" and further, "that he [plaintiff] thought he did about 2,800 yards on that section in January—he guessed at it." Defendant testified that nearly all the work done on that section was performed before January, and what was done afterwards was included in the December estimate. Held, that plaintiff's evidence was too vague and indefinite to support referee's finding that he had done 2,800 yards of grading in January.—Schwerin v. De Graff, 19 Minn. 414 (Gil. 359).

[pp] (Minn. 1893) In an action for repairs made in 1889 on an artesian well dug by plaintiff for defendant in 1886, where plaintiff proves the performance of the labor and that the materials were furnished as alleged, in 1889, at defendant's request, he is entitled to recover unless defendant establishes by a preponderance of evidence that the work was done under the original contract.—Gates v. Banholzer, 53 Minn. 514, 55 N. W. 597.

[qq] (Mo. 1873) Although, where work is done or services performed under a special contract, if plaintiff has fully performed the contract on his part, and nothing remains but a duty on the part of defendant to pay the price agreed on, plaintiff is not bound to sue on the written contract, but may use the common counts in assumpsit, still, when the contract is produced on the trial, plaintiff will be required to prove that he has performed it on his part, and that by its terms defendant has become bound to pay the price agreed on; and, if any fact necessary to create a liability on the part of defendant to pay is wanting, plaintiff cannot recover.—Stout v. St. Louis Tribune Co., 52 Mo. 342.

[qq] (Neb. 1888) Plaintiff, when 16 years of age, went to reside with defendant, his brother, under an agreement to continue in his service until he was 21 years old. He remained in the service until seven months before reaching his majority, when he left. In an action to recover for the value of his services, plaintiff testified that defendant was to give him a good span of horses, harness, and wagon when he became of age, while defendant testified he was merely to feed and clothe him, and send him to school during each winter. Held, that a verdict for the value of a span of horses, harness, and wagon was supported by the weight of evidence.—Burkholder v. Burkholder, 25 Neb. 270, 41 N. W. 145.

[r] (Neb. 1893) In an action for services rendered defendants in the milling business, it appeared that plaintiff was the son of one of defendants, and until he worked in defendants' mill had never had any experience in the business. A number of witnesses testified to statements made by plaintiff that he was merely looking after his father's interests in the business, and statements to the same effect by the father. Plaintiff denied recollection of most of the statements attributed to him. Held, that the evidence showed that the services were rendered to plaintiff's father, and not to the firm.—Glade v. White, 36 Neb. 172, 54 N. W. 259.

[rr] (N. H. 1835) Evidence that a party, who had sown grain on the land of another under an agreement that he should have a share of the crop, afterwards agreed to give up his interest to the owner of the land on a promise to pay for what he had done, will not sustain an action for work and labor performed for the owner, since plaintiff, having performed the labor, had an interest in the crop, but no claim against the owner for anything which had been done.—Moore v. Ross, 7 N. H. 528.

[s] (N. H. 1856) Where the relation of parent and child is shown to exist, in an action for services, the law will not presume any other; and in order to establish the existence of an inferior relation, entitling the child to compensation, there must be sufficient proof that the parties understood the inferior relation to subsist between them at the time, and acted with reference to it.—Munger v. Munger, 33 N. H. 581.

[ss] (N. Y. 1846) In an action for work, labor, and services, plaintiff, with other evidence, relied on a sealed note, found among the papers of defendant's intestate, but which had not been delivered, by which he in terms promised to pay to plaintiff $2,000, "for value received, and justly and truly due her for services rendered me during my illness." Held, that this was very slight evidence, as an admission, of the fact stated, and, the other proof in the case showing that nothing was then due plaintiff, that she was not entitled to recover.—Robinson v. Cushman, 2 Denio, 149.

[t] (N. Y. 1860) Where defendant in an action on a quantum meruit shows the existence of a written contract, plaintiff must prove all its contents in case of its loss, so as to show full performance on his part.—Alger v. Raymond, 20 N. Y. Super. Ct. (7 Bosw.) 418.

[tt] (N. Y. 1888) Evidence that plaintiff lived for many years with his family on the farm, and in the house, of his father; that he worked some on the farm, but was away most of the time at work at his trade; that he built additions worth several hundred dollars to the house, and occupied them himself; that he paid for many articles used on the farm; ate at his father's table, furnishing much of the provisions; and paid his father for produce of the farm while living there—will not support an action against the father's executors for the price of the work and materials, as an express promise of payment, or circumstances equivalent thereto, is necessary to establish a liability.—Havens v. Havens, 50 Hun, 605, 3 N. Y. Supp. 219.

[u] (N. Y. 1890) In an action by a stepson for services rendered to the defendant's intestate, the fact that plaintiff gave decedent a note for money received of the decedent does not disprove an agreement between them that plaintiff was to be paid for his services, where decedent stated that he did not want a note, and plaintiff insisted on giving it, because it would be useful when they came to settlement.—Davis v. Gallagher, 55 Hun, 593, 9 N. Y. Supp. 11; judgment reversed (1891) 124 N. Y. 487, 26 N. E. 1045.

[uu] (N. Y. 1890) In an action by a stepson for services rendered to the defendant's intestate, evidence that decedent was paid for the education and maintenance of plaintiff during his minority, that plaintiff worked for him during such time, and until he was about 23 years old, when they had a settlement, and that decedent had stated, after the settlement, that he owed plaintiff for his work and for matters existing between them, was sufficient to show that both parties intended that plaintiff should be paid for his services.—Davis v. Gallagher, 55 Hun, 593, 9 N. Y. Supp. 11, judgment reversed (1891) 124 N. Y. 487, 26 N. E. 1045.

[v] (N. Y. 1895) Evidence that defendant received plaintiff's bill for the services sued for, and promised to pay it when able, is sufficient proof that the services were rendered, and that the value thereof was satisfactory to defendant, where no evidence is introduced by defendant.—Norwood v. Hickok (City Ct. N. Y.) 14 Misc. Rep. 236, 35 N. Y. Supp. 713.

[vv] (N. Y. 1896) In an action by a corporation for work and material furnished defendant, it appeared that the order was given by defendant to his debtor, with the understanding that the value of the work and material was to be credited on his bill; that defendant did not know plaintiff, or intend to contract with it; and that such debtor died during the performance of the work, without having disclosed any agency, and defendant had no reason to suspect there was any. There were circumstances justifying findings that such debtor did not contract as agent, but as principal, and that, if any labor or material came from plaintiff, defendant was unaware of it at the time, and it must have been furnished under some arrangement by which such debtor should pay for it. Held, that a judgment for defendant was proper. —Richard Taylor Co. v. Cannon (Sup.) 37 N. Y. Supp. 648.

[w] (N. Y. 1896) In an action to recover on a quantum meruit for services rendered, it appeared that defendant, on account of sickness, was in need of some one to conduct his business, and that plaintiff, under a request from defendant's brother-in-law, assumed charge of the business during defendant's sickness, defendant executing to him powers of attorney to sign, accept and indorse all checks, notes, and drafts. Held, that a finding that the services were rendered under an implied contract for compensation was warranted.—Wiley v. Goodsell, 8 App. Div. 452, 38 N. Y. Supp. 376.

[ww] (Or. 1887) In a suit on two causes of action, one for tools purchased for use in performing the contract and one for the value of work, for the performance of which plaintiff obtained the tools, evidence as to what tools plaintiff so obtained is material only so far as it tends to show what plaintiff did in performing the work, and is not competent to charge defendant with the expense of obtaining the tools.—Keller v. Bley, 15 Or. 429, 15 Pac. 705.

[x] (Pa. 1879) Evidence that a claimant performed certain services for the decedent for more than a year, and that the services were of a certain value, is sufficient to support the claim for compensation for work performed for the decedent, in the absence of any proof of an agreement as to the amount of the wages. —In re Wells' Estate, 36 Leg. Int. 286.

[xx] (Pa. 1892) Evidence that a father agreed to compensate his son with money or land, if he would work the father's farm until the latter could get out of debt, and that the son did so work, but had never been compensated therefor, although at one time the farm was surveyed and a portion of it run off for him, is sufficient to sustain a recovery by the son in an action for such compensation.—McLaughlin v. McLaughlin, 145 Pa. 582, 23 Atl. 400.

[y] (S. C. 1844) Where plaintiff sues for extra compensation on a quantum meruit, and shows a written contract covering the work done, he fails to make such a case entitling him to recover, unless he shows that his verbal evidence went to construe the written contract, so as to entitle him to regard the work as extra.—Nesbitt v. Louisville, C. & C. R. Co., 2 Speers, 697.

[yy] (Tenn. 1895) On quantum meruit for services three witnesses testified that defendant took plaintiff to live with him for his board and clothes. Plaintiff testified that he was to receive a horse, saddle, and bridle. Held, that plaintiff could not recover.—Capps v. Groseclose, 95 Tenn. (11 Pickle) 329, 32 S. W. 199.

[z] (Vt. 1861) In order to sustain a claim for services rendered by a child, it is not necessary that the proof of the understanding between the parties should be unequivocal and conclusive. It is sufficient if it is established by a fair preponderance of the evidence.—Putnam v. Town, 34 Vt. 429.

[zz] (Wis. 1879) A person employed to keep the account books of another may recover the balance due for his services on other proof than the condition of the books, though the books were so negligently and unskillfully kept as not to show the state of the accounts between the parties.—McCormick v. Ketchum, 48 Wis. 643, 4 N. W. 798.

(D) AMOUNT OF RECOVERY.

IN GENERAL, § 56.
EFFECT OF EXPRESS CONTRACT, § 57.
INADEQUATE AND EXCESSIVE ALLOWANCE, § 58.

Right to reasonable value in general, see ante, §§ 1–10.

§ 56. In general.

Measure of damages for failure to perform work and labor, see "Damages," vol. 15, cc. 2037–2041, § 292.

Value of work performed as measure of damages for breach of contract for services where performance is prevented, see "Damages," vol. 15, cc. 2074–2076, §§ 330, 331.

[a] In an action for work, labor, and services, where the proof shows that no compensation was agreed upon, plaintiff will, upon proof, be entitled to a reasonable sum for the services performed.

—(Ill. 1858) Frazer v. Gregg, 20 Ill. (10 Peck) 299; (1885) City of Chicago v. Sexton, 115 Ill. 230, 2 N. E. 263; (1896) Howard v. Gobel, 62 Ill. App. 497; Gobel v. Howard, Id.;

(Ky. 1836) Chiles Ex'rs v. Craig, 34 Ky. (4 Dana) 544;

(Mo. 1853) Crole v. Thomas, 19 Mo. 70;

(Tex. 1881) Deball v. James, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 91.

[b] In assumpsit for services, where their value is not proved, the verdict can be only for nominal damages.

—(Ark. 1848) Belfour v. Raney, 8 Ark. (3 Eng.) 479;

N. Y. 1888) Gill v. New York Cab Co., 48 Hun, 524, 1 N. Y. Supp. 202.

[c] (Cal. 1870) In an action to recover wages for work and labor, interest can only be recovered from the time of filing the complaint.—McFadden v. Crawford, 39 Cal. 662.

[d] (Ill. 1858) In an action for work and labor, plaintiff is entitled to recover the price fixed by contract, if there was one; if not, then what his services were reasonably worth.—Fraser v. Gregg, 20 Ill. (10 Peck) 300.

[e] (La. 1845) In the absence of any contract, plaintiff, claiming for surveys as to whose value the witnesses differ, will be allowed the compensation fixed by law.—McCollam v. Beattie, 9 Rob. 474.

[f] (La. 1861) In a suit on a quantum meruit, the lowest sum that the evidence will justify does not necessarily mean the lowest that has been mentioned by any of the witnesses. It is the evidence, taken as a whole, that is submitted to the consideration of the judge.—Holley v. Borland, 16 La. Ann. 186.

[g] (Me. 1852) It is not a rule of law that a person who performs services faithfully and with competent skill is not entitled to the same compensation as one having more skill or learning, who performed the same services no better.—Stockbridge v. Crooker, 34 Me. 349, 56 Am. Dec. 662.

[h] (Mass. 1846) A father forbade a manufacturing company to employ his minor daughter any further, and gave to them a notice that, if they continued to employ her, he would demand a certain sum per week for her labor, without any deduction on any account, and also directed them not to pay or allow her anything on account of her labor. Held, that the father, in an action to recover for her labor subsequently done, was entitled to recover only so much as her labor was reasonably worth, deducting the price of board provided for her, without any deduction for clothing.—Adams v. Woonsocket Co., 52 Mass. (11 Metc.) 327.

[i] (Mich. 1895) In an action to recover the reasonable value of services rendered in giving information leading to the arrest of criminals, it is not competent for plaintiff to base his judgment as to the value of his services on the fact that specific rewards may have been offered in cases more or less similar.—Foley v. Platt, 105 Mich. 635, 63 N. W. 520.

[j] (N. Y. 1886) Where a bookkeeper was engaged to examine defendant's books in preparation for an action at law contemplated by the defendant, in an action by the bookkeeper to recover for his services, it was error to charge that the amount recoverable might be based on the use defendant intended to make of the work and purpose he had in view for having it done, instead of basing it on the work performed, the time consumed in performing it, and the reasonable value of plaintiff's services.—Carples v. Rosenbaum, 1 N. Y. St. Rep. 631.

[k] (N. Y. 1889) Where an heir took decedent from the poorhouse and cared for him before an offer by decedent's committee to pay her for caring for him was made, and she testified that she did not accept the offer, and the evidence of the price fixed for her services was indefinite, interest on her claim should be disallowed.—Stephenson v. Cotter (Sup.) 5 N. Y. Supp. 749.

[l] (N. Y. 1895) In an action for work done and materials furnished by plaintiff's assignor in engraving and supplying bonds for defendant, the preliminary cost of engraving the plate from which the bonds are to be printed constitutes part of the value of the work, and a recovery can be had therefor without delivery of the plate.—Purdy v. Nova Scotia Midland Ry. & I. Co. (Com. Pl.) 11 Misc. Rep. 406, 32 N. Y. Supp. 157.

[m] (N. Y. 1895) One who agrees to furnish labor for another, no price being fixed, is entitled to a profit thereon, and is not limited in his recovery to the amount which he paid the workmen.—Marshall v. Cohen (Com. Pl.) 11 Misc. Rep. 397, 32 N. Y. Supp. 283.

[n] (Ohio, 1834) Where no price is fixed for work, the rule is to take the common price at the time and place of performance.—Bagley v. Bates, Wright, 705.

[o] (Pa. 1827) A tradesman, removing from one place to another, and there doing work without any agreement about the price, can claim only at the rate of the latter, and not of the former, place.—Gracy v. Bailee, 16 Serg. & R. 126.

[p] (S. C. 1823) In an action for work and labor, no more can be recovered than the value of the services rendered, exclusive of interest.—Farrand v. Bouchell, 1 Harp. 83.

[q] (Tenn. 1853) In an action to recover a quantum meruit for services in teaching defendant the art and mysteries of psychology and clairvoyance, the measure of damages is not what the defendant gained, but what the plaintiff deserved for his services.—Edington v. Pickle, 33 Tenn. (1 Sneed) 122.

§ 57. Effect of express contract.

[a] (Conn. 1856) In determining the amount of the plaintiff's compensation, all the circumstances under which the services were rendered are to be taken into consideration, and, among them, the existence and terms of the contract.—Clark v. Terry, 25 Conn. 395.

[b] (Ill. 1862) Where it appears that a specific sum was agreed upon as a rate of compensation for services, no term of service being agreed upon, a recovery may be had, in an action of assumpsit for work and labor, at the rate agreed upon, for the service rendered.—Pfund v. Zimmerman, 29 Ill. (19 Peck) 269.

[c] (Ind. 1858) In the absence of other evidence, the price may be the measure of damages, in an action on the count for work and labor, where the special contract was not fulfilled.—Wolcott v. Yeager, 11 Ind. 84.

[d] (Ind. 1864) The price for work done, in part under a special contract and in part under a parol modification thereof, should be controlled by the special contract, so far as it is done in pursuance of it.—Garver v. Daubenspeck, 22 Ind. 238.

[e] (Mass. 1852) Where plaintiff contracted to build a dam according to specifications, and, acting in good faith, built a dam not in accordance with the contract, the jury, in an action for work done, should deduct from the contract price so much as the dam built was worth less than the dam contracted for.—Gleason v. Smith, 63 Mass. (9 Cush.) 484, 57 Am. Dec. 62.

[f] (Mass. 1873) Where a plaintiff sues for work done under a contract, which he has substantially performed, the measure of damages is the contract price, deducting the diminution in value of the building to defendant caused by deviations from the contract.—Cullen v. Sears, 112 Mass. 299.

[g] (Mich. 1887) In an action to recover for sawing lumber, some of which was sawed by a circular saw, and some by a band saw, where defendant refuses to pay more than the regular rate for sawing by circular saw, an instruction requiring the plaintiff to make out his case before the jury, either by proving an original understanding that band sawing was to be done at a higher price, or that it was subsequently mutually understood that the higher price was to be given, and telling them that if the contract was in the first instance to saw with the circular saw, and there was a subsequent arrangement to have a part of it cut with the band saw, defendant should pay for this what band sawing was worth, is not erroneous.—Torrent v. Damm, 66 Mich. 105, 33 N. W. 49.

[h] (N. Y. 1835) Where a carpenter agrees to build a house according to certain plans for a specific amount, but the plan is abandoned, so that it is impossible to trace the contract in the work done, the measure of compensation is the value of the work, as if no contract had been entered into.—Hollinsead v. Mactier, 13 Wend. 276.

[i] (N. C. 1851) Where work done under a contract is not completed within the time, and is carried on with the assent of the parties, the contractor is confined in a quantum meruit to the contract price.—Fanner v. Francis, 34 N. C. 282.

[j] (Or. 1879) Where a party rendering services fails to fully comply with the agreement under which they were to be rendered, his recovery for such services should be their reasonable value, deducting therefrom any damages which the other party has sustained by reason of failure to comply with the contract.—Steeples v. Newton, 7 Or. 110, 33 Am. Rep. 705.

[k] (Pa. 1890) A contract for the construction of three curves on defendant's cable railroad was awarded to plaintiff at a specified price per lineal foot. These curves were to be solid curves, composed of heavy boxes, bolted end to end. Subsequently defendant changed its plans so as to lengthen the three curves into one; and, instead of placing the boxes end to end, they were placed 4½ feet apart, with filling pieces between. Held, in assumpsit for the price of the work, that it was proper to instruct that plaintiff was not confined to the actual value of the filling pieces, but was entitled to the contract price therefor, if there was an agreement, express or implied, when the change in the contract was made, that the filling pieces should be regarded as part of the curved work, to be paid for at the contract price.—Marshall

[l] (Tenn. 1878) Where plaintiff has constructed a house not in accordance with the contract, and claims recovery on the ground of acceptance in its defective form by the defendant, he may recover the value of the house at the time received, and not the value of the materials, as such, put into the building, nor of the work done on it.—Parker v. Steed, 69 Tenn. (1 Lea) 206.

[m] (Vt. 1868) In an action to recover for labor done under a contract which provided that plaintiffs should furnish their own tools, it appearing that plaintiffs had used tools of defendant, expecting to pay for their use, and that they had given credit for the same in their specification, held, that they should be bound by such credit, although until the commencement of the suit the defendant had not intended to claim it.—St. Martin v. Thrasher, 40 Vt. 460.

§ 58. Inadequate and excessive allowance.

[a] (Ill. 1868) A verdict for $3,411.60, for 14 months' board and nursing, is excessive, though the patient had ulcers requiring to be washed and dressed daily.—Lockwood v. Onion, 48 Ill. 325.

[b] (Ill. 1870) In an action for board and services rendered a decedent, it appeared that the latter boarded with plaintiff for some 14 months, and except the last month he was able to attend to his business. He was kindly attended, and was at times very unpleasant on account of the character of his disease. Held, that an allowance of $3,900 was so excessive as to call for a reversal of the judgment.—Lockwood v. Onion, 56 Ill. 506.

[c] (Ill. 1875) In an action to recover on a quantum meruit for services rendered deceased, a verdict for $1,420 was excessive, where it appeared that such services consisted in nursing deceased for two years before his death, without any special contract as to compensation; that, with the exception of several visits with deceased to other cities for treatment, the services rendered did not prevent plaintiff from attending to his own business, until a few months prior to decedent's death; and that plaintiff had received from deceased himself over $3,000.—Darling v. McDonald, 77 Ill. 520.

[d] (Ind. 1892) Where there was evidence from which the jury might have found that the drilling of two holes 35 feet deep was worth $140, a verdict for $125 was not excessive.—Nicholl v. Pressler, 3 Ind. App. 324, 29 N. E. 611.

[e] (Ind. 1892) In an action to recover for services while living with defendant on a farm for six and a half years preceding plaintiff's majority, there was evidence that defendant agreed to pay him a reasonable price therefor, that he was boarded and comfortably clothed by defendant, and worked about the farm as is customary for boys of his age, and in the winter went to school three or four months, occasionally dropping out to help at farm work. Held, that a verdict of $500 was not excessive.—Loy v. Petty, 3 Ind. App. 241, 29 N. E. 788.

[f] (Ind. 1893) In an action for services, there was evidence that plaintiff and her husband took defendant's father to board; that he became afflicted with a gangrenous foot; and that, on defendant's promise to pay her what it was reasonably worth, plaintiff nursed and waited on the patient for about three weeks, and provided for him until his death. Held, that a verdict for $125 is not excessive, though plaintiff was not a trained nurse, and was without any other experience than that which comes to the average woman, 36 years of age.—Storms v. Lemon, 7 Ind. App. 435, 34 N. E. 644.

[g] (Ind. 1895) In an action for services rendered in keeping house for and nursing decedent for five years before her death, where it appears that the disease with which decedent was afflicted rendered the services very disagreeable, a verdict for $666 is not excessive.—Wetzel v. Kellar, 12 Ind. App. 75, 39 N. E. 895.

[h] (Iowa, 1889) In an action for work and labor in prospecting for coal and for breach of contract, a finding of the jury of a certain amount due plaintiff on one count cannot be held excessive on the ground that a payment on that count is shown and admitted, where it is not admitted that the payment was to apply on the claim set up in that count.—Miller v. Brown, 42 N. W. 561.

[i] (Iowa, 1891) Where, in an action for services rendered in drilling prospect holes for coal, plaintiff claims $707, but his undisputed testimony as to the depths of the holes, and the price per foot, shows that he is only entitled to $533, of which he admits having received $350, a verdict for $357 is excessive.—Miller v. Brown, 82 Iowa, 79, 47 N. W. 895.

[j] (Ky. 1840) An allowance of $6,000 for the services of a civil engineer in making a survey, maps, profiles, and estimates for a railroad from Grand Gulf to Jackson, Miss., a distance of about 60 miles, all expenses borne, requiring two months' labor, is excessive.—Moore v. Martin, 40 Ky. (1 B. Mon.) 97.

[k] (La. 1844) A judgment for $428 for medical attendance and medicines furnished decedent in his last illness during one month, although a large one, will not be disturbed, where it appears that plaintiff rendered decedent unusual and exclusive attention night and day during his last illness, remaining with him all the time, with the exception of a few days, neglecting all other business, and traveling a distance of 20 miles in going to and from his residence to that of decedent.—McManus v. Lemee, 9 Rob. 115.

[l] (La. 1845) In an action to recover for services in guarding property from trespassers, one witness testified that he would have charged $50 per month for such services. Another witness testified that, if a man employed to render them had attended to nothing else, he might have been entitled to $30 per month, but that a man situated as plaintiff was, who went over the land once a month, should not receive more than $15 per month. Held, that a judgment for the latter amount will not be disturbed.—Succession of Milne, 12 Rob. 329.

[m] (Minn. 1891) In an action for services rendered defendant in attending to and protecting his interests in the estate of his deceased son, it appeared that such services consisted almost entirely of correspondence with various persons, the nature and extent of which were given in evidence. The only testimony as to the value of the services was that of plaintiff, who claimed they were worth $50. Held, that a verdict for that amount in plaintiff's favor would not be set aside as unsupported by the evidence.—Svanoe v. Larson, 47 Minn. 7, 49 N. W. 388.

[n] (N. Y. 1889) In an action for the value of certain "reproduction" engraving work, where the evidence shows that 40 cents per inch was the usual and reasonable compensation for engraving the original work, and that reproduction required less labor and skill, at which rates the value of the work sued for would be about $75, a judgment for $150 and costs cannot be sustained.—Phillips v. Munsey (Com. Pl.) 3 N. Y. Supp. 530.

[o] (N. Y. 1892) In an action by an accountant against an executor for services rendered him in preparing accounts of the estate, the accounts were exhibited to the jury, and testimony given by expert accountants that the usual compensation for such services was from $20 to $25 per day. Plaintiff claimed to have spent 75 days in preparing the accounts, though his testimony in that respect was vague. Held, it was competent for the jury to say, from an inspection of the accounts, whether 75 days, of from 6 to 8 hours each, were reasonably required in preparing the same, and that a verdict of $1,500 for plaintiff should not have been set aside as excessive.—Douglass v. Leonard (Com. Pl.) 17 N. Y. Supp. 591, reversing (City Ct. N. Y. 1891) 14 N. Y. Supp. 274.

[p] (N. Y. 1893) In an action for services rendered by plaintiff's assignor to defendant, it appeared that the assignor and defendant were both lawyers, and occupied the same office, and that they took some business together under the agreement to divide the proceeds. Defendant testified that all the services rendered by plaintiff's assignor were under that agreement. The amount of the claim was $1,870, including a charge of $1,200 in a case in which defendant testified that they received $210 under an agreement of which plaintiff's assignor had knowledge, and that he received half of that sum. This was not denied. Held, that a verdict for $1,000 was excessive, since it must have included some portion of the $1,200 item.—Lynch v. Lerche, 73 Hun, 553, 26 N. Y. Supp. 96.

[q] (Pa. 1850) Nine hundred dollars damages for extra services rendered in a last illness, which was not a long one, are exorbitant.—Fisher v. Keyser, 7 Leg. Int. 114.

[r] (Tex. 1889) Where the only evidence as to the value of defendant's services in doing certain work is that it took 13 days' labor of himself and team, and was worth $2 per day, it is error to allow him only $16.—Fagan v. Whitcomb (App.) 14 S. W. 1018.

§ 59. Questions for jury.

Commencement, completion, or character of work as question of law or fact in suit to enforce mechanic's lien, see "Mechanics' Liens," vol. 34, cc. 2757, 2758, §§ 585–587.

[a] (Ill. 1870) Where defendant, in an action for work and labor, defends on the ground that the work was so unskillfully done that he suffered damage thereby, whether the presence of the defendant while the work was being done and his failure to complain amounted to a waiver of such defects was for the jury, and not for the court.—Garfield v. Huls, 54 Ill. 427.

[b] (Mich. 1889) Plaintiff testified that, while he was filling the office of judge, defendant came to him and said that if he was not reelected he wanted him to go to L. to look after his mining interests, sell mining stock, etc.; that he would make it more profitable to plaintiff than the judgeship; and that a few days after his term expired, when defendant asked him if he was ready to go to L., he replied that he was. Plaintiff then went to L., made himself acquainted with the business men there, and made inquiries about the mine in which defendant was interested, but did not go to see it. He received one letter while there from defendant, asking him to gather up all the news he could in regard to how his mining interests were being conducted. Defendant testified that he had simply told plaintiff that he thought he would do well in L., and that if he should go there he would give him business; but had no intention of making any contract with him. There was some other testimony that defendant had said he was glad plaintiff was going to L.; that he wanted such a man to look after his business. Held, in an action of assumpsit for services in going to L. to look after plaintiff's interest, that the question as to whether there was a contract of employment was properly left to the jury.—Parrish v. Bradley, 73 Mich. 610, 41 N. W. 818.

[c] (Mo. 1889) Plaintiff, having recovered judgment against defendant for miscellaneous services rendered during a specified period, afterwards sued for other services, of the same character, alleged to have been rendered during the same period. There was no evidence for what particular services defendant was employed. Held that, whether the former recovery covered part or all of the services sued for was a question of fact for the jury, and a request by plaintiff for an instruction that the jury should not be influenced by the record in the former case unless they believed that the "value of plaintiff's services" sued for was included in that case was properly refused.—Green v. Von Der Ahe, 36 Mo. App. 394.

[d] (Mo. 1895) Plaintiff was employed to find some one who would build a hotel on defendant's land. During his endeavors in that direction, it was learned that A. would lease the land on certain conditions, but would not erect the hotel thereon, and thereafter the efforts of plaintiff, with the assent of defendant, were confined to effecting the lease, and removing obstructing conditions in the way thereof. Held, that it was a question for the jury whether there was an implied contract to pay plaintiff for his services in effecting the lease.—Kerr v. Cusenbary, 60 Mo. App. 558, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 237.

[e] (N. J. 1895) Where there is some evidence of work done and materials furnished, raising an implied contract to pay what they were worth, and some evidence from which a jury could infer their value, it is not error to submit the case to the jury; and, if the verdict upon such evidence is excessive, correction must be sought under a rule to show cause.—King v. Holbrook, 58 N. J. Law (29 Vroom) 369, 33 Atl. 965.

[f] (N. Y. 1842) Plaintiff was a clerk in a sugar refinery of B. Defendants were B.'s factors, and, as such, made him advances, and held some machinery of the refinery in pledge. Subsequently B. became insane, and defendants told the superintendent of the establishment to continue the work, employing the necessary hands. He retained plaintiff as clerk. Held, in an action by plaintiff for work and labor, that defendant's liability to him was a question for the jury.—Colgan v. Aymar, Hill & D. Supp. 27.

[g] (N. Y. 1893) In an action by an adult child for services rendered to her deceased mother, evidence that plaintiff had left home and engaged in business; that the mother, who was an invalid, left the residence of one of her other children with the express intention of going to see whether plaintiff would come and live with her at her homestead and keep house for her; and that thereafter plaintiff gave up her business, and lived with her mother until her death,—warrants the submission to the jury of the question whether or not plaintiff returned to her mother and commenced housekeeping at her request.—Marion v. Farnan, 68 Hun, 383, 22 N. Y. Supp. 946.

[h] (Vt. 1883) Plaintiff, claiming to have worked for defendant for wages, and not merely as a member of his family for support, testified that he told her to stay and he would do well by her, that he wanted her to work for him, that he was going to pay her. Held, that there was sufficient evidence to go to the jury. —Ashley v. Hendee, 56 Vt. 209.

§ 60. —— Value of services.

[a] (Ky. 1829) In assumpsit for work and labor, the jury, from their knowledge of the value of labor, may find a verdict for the price of work done, although there was no evidence of its worth at the time and place the work was done.—Craig v. Durrett, 24 Ky. (1 J. J. Marsh.) 365, 19 Am. Dec. 103.

[b] (Ky. 1860) In an action of assumpsit for labor, the jury, or the judge, if a jury has been waived, may, in the absence of evidence of the value of such labor, or where the testimony leaves uncertain the amount plaintiff is entitled to recover, find a verdict for the price, from their own knowledge of the worth of the labor. —Baum v. Winston, 60 Ky. (3 Metc.) 127.

[c] (Mo. 1876) In an action for compensation for services, if plaintiff proves services rendered upon request, but rests without adducing evidence of their value, the jury may, of their own knowledge, estimate the value.—Darby v. Knapp, 2 Mo. App. 486.

[d] (N. C. 1860) It is the province of a jury, in an action of assumpsit for work and labor, to affix a value to services, according to their nature and extent, as proved; and it is not necessary for witnesses to estimate their value in money.—Madden v. Porterfield, 53 N. C. 166.

[e] (Ohio, 1894) In an action on a quantum meruit for services in doing chores at irregular intervals when called upon, without a hiring for a specific period, plaintiff is not required to present evidence of the value of such services, as the jury may fix the value according to their own judgment and knowledge on the subject.—McIntyre v. Garlick, 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 416.

[f] (Vt. 1844) If plaintiff show to the jury that he has performed services for defendant, but his testimony leaves uncertain the amount which he is entitled to recover therefor, this will not preclude his right of recovery, but the jury may allow him such sum as they deem the services reasonably worth.—Mattocks v. Lyman, 16 Vt. 113.

§ 61. —— Contract implied from relations of parties.

[a] (Ark. 1891) Plaintiff, who was left an orphan without means, when ten years old was taken into the family of defendant, not of kin to her, where she continued to live some three years after attaining her majority. Held, in an action for value of services during the three years, that, while plaintiff had the burden of showing an implied promise, it was proper to instruct the jury that if, under all the circumstances of the case, including the relation of parties, the services were of such a nature as to lead to a reasonable belief that the parties understood there should be pecuniary compensation, they should find an implied promise, since in all such cases it is a question for the jury whether the services were rendered under an implied contract.—Hogg v. Laster, 56 Ark. 382, 19 S. W. 975.

[b] (Ill. 1895) Where the services sued for were rendered by plaintiff while she was a member of the family of defendant, who was her cousin, it is proper to instruct the jury that they are authorized to find whether there was a contract, express or implied, to pay for plaintiff's services.—Heffron v. Brown, 155 Ill. 322, 40 N. E. 583, affirming (1894) 54 Ill. App. 377.

[c] (Ind. 1893) In an action against the estate of a decedent for services, it appeared that plaintiff had been fed, clothed, and sent to school until 12 years old, but from that time was compelled to perform all the menial duties incident to housekeeping, besides caring for decedent's wife, who was sick for many years. Witnesses testified that plaintiff was well treated, and was taken to be one of the decedent's family, while others, though vouching for the good treatment, testified as to the duties imposed and services exacted. Held a question for the jury whether the services were rendered under an implied promise to pay, or solely as a member of decedent's family; and for this purpose they might take into consideration decedent's condition in life, his habits and manner of living, as well as his treatment of plaintiff with reference to other members of the family or other hired help.—Henzler's Estate v. Bossard, 6 Ind. App. 701, 33 N. E. 217.

[d] (Ky. 1836) A negro, who was emancipated by the last will of his master, remained with and labored for the defendant during the period of a controversy as to the validity of the will. After the will was established, he sued the defendant for the value of his labor, and proved the above facts, and that the defendant had said, though not to the plaintiff, that if the will was established he would pay him for his services. Held, that the jury might infer a contract from the evidence, and that the court ought not to instruct the jury to find for the defendant.—Black v. Meaux, 34 Ky. (4 Dana) 188.

[e] (Mass. 1833) Whether, in an action by an adult daughter, who continued to reside in her father's family and to be supported by him, to recover for the performance of such useful services as is customary for a daughter to perform, the law raises the presumption that she was entitled to compensation, and throws the burden of proof on defendant to show that they were performed without any view to such compensation, is a question of fact.—Guild v. Guild, 32 Mass. (15 Pick.) 129.

[f] (Mich. 1895) In an action by a daughter to enforce a claim against her father's estate for services, where there is evidence that they were valuable, that the father frequently stated that he intended to pay her for them, that he deeded his farm to her for them, and that the deed was void because his wife had not joined therein, the question whether the services were rendered and accepted with the understanding that they should be paid for should be submitted to the jury.—Sammon v. Wood, 107 Mich. 506, 65 N. W. 529.

[g] (Mo. 1854) Where a mother-in-law performed menial services in the house of her son-in-law, it is for the jury to say whether there was an implied contract for compensation.—Smith v. Myers, 19 Mo. 433.

[h] (Mo. 1867) Where a child resided with his parents and rendered them service after coming of age, held, that it was a question for the jury to decide, taking into consideration the circumstances of the case, whether an implied contract for compensation existed.—Hart v. Hess, 41 Mo. 441.

[i] (Mo. 1888) In an action by a daughter against her father's estate for services rendered decedent in his lifetime, the evidence showed that, while plaintiff was away from home working for herself, her mother was taken sick; that plaintiff then returned home, whether at her parents' request did not appear, and cared for her parents until their death; and that the father had on several occasions spoken of compensating plaintiff for her services. Held, that it presented a case to go to the jury on the question of an implied promise to pay. —Koch v. Hebel, 32 Mo. App. 103.

[j] (Mo. 1894) Evidence sufficient to raise a presumption that services by a child were rendered and received with the expectation that they would be paid for by the parent requires a submission to the jury of the issue as to whether the parent is liable, under an implied promise, for such services.—Finnell v. Gooch, 59 Mo. App. 209, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 30.

[k] (Pa. 1862) Where decedent, who had been boarding with his tenant and paying therefor, became dissatisfied and went to live with his son-in-law, saying he would board nowhere else, and that he had enough to pay for his boarding, the question as to whether the son-in-law was entitled to recover for the services rendered and board furnished was for the jury.—Smith v. Milligan, 43 Pa. (7 Wright) 107.

[l] (Pa. 1868) In an action of assumpsit, brought by a nephew to recover against his uncle's administrator for labor performed for the uncle, it is for the jury to say whether, upon all the facts, a promise to pay wages is established.—Neel's Adm'r v. Neel, 59 Pa. (9 P. F. Smith) 347.

[m] (R. I. 1853) As a general rule of law, the request to perform a given service implies on the part of the person making the request a promise to pay for such service when performed; yet circumstances in the case, or certain relationship between the parties, may prevent such promise from being necessarily implied, and the jury must determine from the evidence whether the party making the request has given the other party cause to think he should be remunerated.—Partlow v. Cooke, 2 R. I. 451.

§ 62. Dismissal, nonsuit, and direction of verdict.

[a] (La. 1836) Plaintiff, who, in an action for work done, neither proves that it was beneficial to defendant, nor that there was a contract as alleged, must be nonsuited.—Duffy v. Byrne, 9 La. 211.

[b] (Me. 1858) In assumpsit on an account for work and labor performed under a written contract, a nonsuit may properly be ordered if the contract is not proved.—Webber v. Inhabitants of School Dist. No. 9 in Shapleigh, 45 Me. 299.

[c] (Mich. 1889) Defendant and plaintiff had been old friends. Defendant kept a livery stable. Several years ago plaintiff, having no home, came to defendant's house, bringing with him his horse, which defendant said he would keep for his use, and that plaintiff could stay with him, and help around the stable. He stayed six months, and, after being gone some time, defendant saw him, and asked him if he did not want to come up and stay with him, and help him, to which he replied, "All right." He came and stayed about four years, doing chores around the stable. Nothing was said as to payment. He purchased clothes on defendant's credit, and whenever he wanted money he asked defendant for it, and received it. He went on a visit to his daughter, and when he left no settlement was had or claim made for one, but defendant gave him $25, and told him if he did not like it to come back, and he could have a home as long as he liked. After about six months he returned, and, as he testified, "went to living with defendant as before," and stayed over two years. Held, in an action of assumpsit for work and labor, that the court properly charged that there was no agreement, express or implied, to pay for the services rendered during the last two years, and directed a verdict for defendant.—Covel v. Turner, 74 Mich. 408, 41 N. W. 1091.

[d] (Mich. 1894) Where, in an action against a father-in-law for services, there is evidence that plaintiff and her husband lived with defendant before the husband's death, and performed services without any agreement for payment, and after his death defendant allowed plaintiff to remain on the same terms as before, a refusal to direct a verdict for defendant is error.—Harris v. Harris, 106 Mich. 246, 64 N. W. 15.

[e] (Mo. 1885) One suing for the reasonable value of services will not be nonsuited on the introduction of evidence that the services were performed under contract at a stipulated price.—Floerke v. Teuscher Distilling Co., 20 Mo. App. 76.

[f] (Mont. 1889) In an action for work done for defendants in digging a well, where the complaint contains the quantum meruit count, it is error for the court to take the case from the jury, and dismiss the suit, on the theory that the suit was on a contract under which plaintiffs were to be paid if they found water, and otherwise not.—Littrell v. Wilcox, 9 Mont. 97, 22 Pac. 503.

[g] (N. Y. 1827) Where a declaration contains special and general counts in assumpsit for work and labor, and the proof received under the former count varies, but would have supported the common counts, plaintiff was properly nonsuited, where he did not insist on the common counts.—Hatch v. Adams, 8 Cow. 35.

[h] (N. C. 1892) In an action for removing material of an old bridge to the place where a new one was constructed by plaintiff for defendant under a written contract, it appeared that the claim for such removal was entirely separate and independent of the written contract. There was no allegation or proof that the work of removing such material was performed at the request or for the benefit of defendant, or that it accepted or took benefit by the same. Held, that plaintiff was not entitled to recover, and a judgment of nonsuit was proper.—Foy v. Craven County Com'rs, 111 N. C. 129, 15 S. E. 944.

[i] (Pa. 1896) Where plaintiff claimed for work done and labor performed, evidence showing that he was the contractor furnishing the laborers to perform the work warrants a judgment of nonsuit.—Diller v. Frantz (Com. Pl.) 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 306, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 180.

[j] (Wash. 1895) On trial of an action for labor performed in driving piles, where it was not shown that defendant requested the work to be done, but it appeared that defendant erected a mill on the piles, it was proper to deny a nonsuit.—Maney v. Hart, 11 Wash. 67, 39 Pac. 268.

[k] (Wash. 1896) In an action for labor performed by plaintiff in and about a certain mine, it appeared that plaintiff, while in charge of such mine in behalf of others than defendant, received from defendant one letter, among others received during an extended correspondence, in which defendant, referring to a portion of the services, stated that, if certain other parties did not pay for them, he would have to. Such correspondence showed that, after the receipt of such letter, plaintiff was maintaining the same relations with the parties who placed him in charge of the mine as before; that defendant's statement in such letter was on the theory that the mine itself would be responsible for the work, and defendant, having an interest therein as mortgagee, would eventually have to pay in order to enjoy his property in the mine. Held, that a nonsuit was properly directed.—Bunker v. Blair, 14 Wash. 106, 44 Pac. 122.

§ 63. Instructions.

See post, § 65 [b, g].

[a] (Cal. 1887) Where, under a complaint for services rendered, plaintiff was entitled to recover such a sum as defendant had agreed to give for his services, or, if no price was agreed upon, then such sum as his services were reasonably worth, the court instructed the jury that, "though the plaintiff has brought suit for a certain sum, you are authorized to bring in a verdict for such a sum as you may think his services were reasonably worth, if you find he is entitled to anything." Held no error.—Manning v. Dallas, 73 Cal. 420, 15 Pac. 34.

[b] (Cal. 1887) The court refused to give the following instruction: "If from the evidence you find that the compensation M. was to receive from D. for his services was to be at the entire discretion of D., then I charge you that you must render a verdict for the defendant, no matter what you may think his services are worth;" but instructed the jury that, "when services are rendered upon an understanding that the remuneration is to be at the discretion of the employer, no action is maintainable for the value of such services." Held, that whatever error there may have been in the court's refusal to give the former instruction was cured by the giving of the latter.—Manning v. Dallas, 73 Cal. 420, 15 Pac. 34.

[c] (Ill. 1858) It is erroneous to give an instruction to the jury, in an action to recover for work and labor, which excludes from their consideration all proof of a special contract set up in defense.—Lee v. Quirk, 20 Ill. (10 Peck) 392.

[d] (Ill. 1882) In an action against an estate for keeping the children of the deceased, an instruction that before plaintiff could recover he must show that at the time of rendering the services he expected pay, and actually did charge the same to the defendant, is erroneous, as it was not necessary that he keep an account and charge each item.—McCleery v. McLean, 11 Ill. App. (11 Bradw.) 44.

[e] (Ill. 1883) In an action for labor performed for defendant, it is error to modify a requested instruction denying plaintiff a recovery, unless the defendant accepted the work and made use of the building, in which case the plaintiff could recover the value of the work done, where there was no evidence of any such acceptance.—Coggeshall v. Mates, 13 Ill. App. (13 Bradw.) 117.

[f] (Ill. 1886) In assumpsit to recover the value of work done, an instruction: "The value or no value of the job to the defendants is of no consequence to you. Whether it be of value or not to them is wholly immaterial in the case. If they ordered it, they should pay for it," is not erroneous as intimating that, if appellants ordered the work, they must pay the price asked.—Kirk v. Wolf Mfg. Co., 118 Ill. 567, 8 N. E. 815.

[g] (Ind. 1891) Where defendants, in an action for work and labor, alleged in their answer that plaintiff was indebted to a person named, and that they had paid the said indebtedness at plaintiff's request, and upon his agreement that they should have credit therefor, it was proper to charge that they were not entitled to credit unless plaintiff made the request and agreement as stated; and, if they consider the charge not sufficiently full, it is their duty to ask an additional charge.—Gastlin v. Weeks, 2 Ind. App. 222, 28 N. E. 331.

[h] (Ind. 1892) Plaintiff in an action for services rendered had lived with defendant as a member of his family for nearly 20 years. Held, that defendant could not complain of an instruction to the jury that "if plaintiff, at the request of defendant, performed for him labor and services, the law implied a promise on his part to pay for the same what it was reasonably worth," where a following instruction was that "if plaintiff lived in the family of defendant, and was provided for by him as one of his family, and without any contract for wages for her services, or any understanding between them to that effect, then she cannot recover."—Knight v. Knight, 30 N. E. 421.

[i] (Ind. 1895) In an action on the quantum meruit for commission in effecting a sale, an instruction requiring the jury to assess the commission according to the preponderance of the evidence if they find for plaintiff is proper, though the evidence shows a sale to a different vendee than the one alleged in the complaint.—Jenney Electric Co. v. Branham, 145 Ind. 314, 41 N. E. 448, 33 L. R. A. 395.

[j] (Md. 1869) In an action on a contract for work, labor, and materials, the evidence showed that the materials used in the manufacture of the articles in dispute were furnished in part by the plaintiffs and in part by the defendant. The prayer of the defendant was that the court would instruct the jury that the mere retention of the manufactured articles by him was no evidence of acceptance, if the jury should find that in the process of manufacture the materials of the defendant were blended with the work, labor, and materials of the plaintiffs. Held, that the court properly refused such prayer, because it omitted to submit to the jury the question whether the materials of the defendant were so blended with those of the plaintiffs that they could not be separated.—Johnson v. Harvey, 30 Md. 259.

[k] (Md. 1869) In an action on a contract for work, labor, and materials, the evidence showed that the materials used in the manufacture of the articles in dispute were partly furnished by plaintiffs and partly by defendant. Defendant requested a charge that the mere retention of the manufactured articles by him was no evidence of the acceptance, if the jury should find that in the process of manufacture the materials of the defendant were blended with the work, labor, and materials furnished by the plaintiffs. Held, where the evidence also showed that by the course of dealing between the parties the imperfect articles were to be returned, the request was properly refused.—Johnson v. Harvey, 30 Md. 259.

[l] (Md. 1888) In an action on the common counts for money due plaintiff under a contract of employment, and also for money expended by him, on evidence that plaintiff, while in the employment of defendant, made a new engagement with it, and thereupon expended money, and rendered services for it, at its request, a charge that plaintiff could not recover anything if he was at one time employed by defendant, and afterwards entered into a new engagement with it, is properly refused, since, apart from such hypothesis, there was evidence on which he could recover on a quantum meruit.—Public Grain & Stock Exch. v. Patrick, 14 Atl. 522.

[m] (Md. 1892) In an action to recover for services rendered as nurse to an invalid aunt, an instruction that, if certain facts should be found, the jury might find an implied promise to pay, without stating that, if the facts were so found, plaintiff would be entitled to recover, but merely that "plaintiff was entitled to recover what * * * the services were worth," although not critically accurate, was not misleading.—Bouic v. Maught, 76 Md. 440, 25 Atl. 423.

[n] (Mass. 1858) Where, in an action to recover for work under a special contract, the jury were instructed that if the work had been only partially done, and the defendant had availed himself of the plaintiff's work, the plaintiff was entitled to recover what the work was reasonably worth, it was ground of exception that the court omitted to instruct, further, that the plaintiff must have intentionally failed to finish the work, and that they should deduct what it would cost the defendant to finish it according to the contract.—Veazie v. Hosmer, 77 Mass. (11 Gray) 396.

[o] (Mich. 1884) Where, in an action for a balance due for services, plaintiff and others in his behalf testified as to the value of the services, and defendant merely testified as to what the services were, and put in evidence a bill rendered, there was no error in an instruction that no evidence of value had been given by defendant, and that they might base their verdict on the testimony given if they were satisfied with it.—Gartner v. Beller, 54 Mich. 333, 20 N. W. 65.

[oo] (Mich. 1889) Where plaintiff sued her stepmother for services rendered, by a declaration containing only common counts in assumpsit, and there was some evidence as to money received by defendant from plaintiff's earnings, an instruction that, if defendant deceived plaintiff as to her legal rights and thereby obtained possession of plaintiff's earnings, plaintiff was entitled to recover such money, was inapplicable to the case, and should have been refused.—Feiertag v. Feiertag, 73 Mich. 297, 41 N. W. 414.

[p] (Mich. 1889) The refusal of an instruction that the burden of proof was on plaintiff in a suit for services to establish everything necessary to a recovery was not error, where the court charged that plaintiff must show his right to recover by a fair preponderance of evidence, to show the work he did, and its value, and to show what understanding defendant had of the matter, and that he received the benefit of it.—Bonner v. Runals, 76 Mich. 136, 42 N. W. 1087.

[pp] (Mich. 1890) Plaintiff, in an action of assumpsit for work and labor, claimed that defendant, his uncle, agreed to pay him, as a laborer on his farm, the same wages that other men received, and also to pay his wife for housekeeping. Defendant testified that plaintiff came to him, and said he was going to get married, and that he told plaintiff that, if he was going to marry any kind of a "smartish" woman, he could "fetch" her to defendant's house, and she could do work for both of them, and plaintiff could work on his own farm, and that plaintiff said he ought to know how smart she was, for they were raised together, and that no more was said. Held, that it was error to instruct that, if the jury found defendant's version to be correct, they should say what that talk meant, as, under defendant's version, he was entitled to a verdict.—Alderton v. Wright, 81 Mich. 294, 45 N. W. 968.

[q] (Minn. 1893) In an action by a son for work performed for his father while he still continued a member of his family though he had reached his majority, a request by defendant to charge that "the evidence must be clear, direct, and certain" was properly refused, since it might have misled the jury into supposing that, in order to justify a finding that there was an agreement to pay, it must have been directly testified to by some witness who heard it made.—Donahue v. Donahue's Estate, 53 Minn. 460, 55 N. W. 602.

[qq] (Miss. 1843) In assumpsit for work and labor, a charge was given to the jury that "absolute proof that the work was done is not necessary; the jury must weigh the testimony, and form their own conclusion, from that, whether it was done." Held that, although the first clause was incorrect if taken alone, it was so qualified by the latter clause that the whole, taken together, was unobjectionable.—Dickson v. Moody, 10 Miss. (2 Smedes & M.) 17.

[r] (Mo. 1821) Where, in assumpsit for caring for defendant's child, there was some evidence to show an agreement that the services were gratuitously performed, it was error to instruct that defendant was liable, unless he showed a positive agreement that the services were a gratuity.—Coleman v. Roberts, 1 Mo. 97.

[rr] (Mo. 1852) Judgment will be reversed, where the court instructed the jury, in an action for work and labor on a quantum meruit, plaintiff having fixed a price per week for his services in his account filed, that he had alleged and must prove a contract for that sum.—Waldstein v. Bredell, 17 Mo. 352.

[s] (Mo. 1894) A charge, in an action to recover for work and materials, authorising the recovery for the real value of such work and materials, and another authorising the recovery for their reasonable value to the defendant, were not inconsistent.—Heman v. Compton Hill Imp. Co., 58 Mo. App. 480.

[ss] (N. Y. 1874) Where a complaint was in form on a quantum meruit, the allegation being that the sum named was what the plaintiffs reasonably deserved for their services, and the evidence showed that the price was agreed on, and there was no other evidence on the subject of what the services were worth, it was proper to instruct that the jury could not find a verdict for less than the full amount claimed.—Ludlow v. Dole, 1 Hun, 715.

[t] (N. Y. 1886) A bookkeeper, not an expert, was employed to examine the books of a party to a pending suit, so as to be able to give testimony for his employer. Held, in his action for his compensation, that the jury were improperly told that they might consider that the work was intended to form the basis of testimony, or that it was material that a large amount was involved, and that the success of the defendant was a matter of importance to him, since it is only in cases where professional services or skill of a high order is required that such rule applies, the general rule being reasonable pay for the work.—Carples v. Rosenbaum, 13 Daly, 494.

[tt] (N. Y. 1889) Defendant was plaintiff's brother-in-law, and came habitually to plaintiff's house, staying for periods ranging from a few days to several weeks. Plaintiff's evidence tended to show that the circumstances were such that the law would imply a promise by defendant to pay board. On all the evidence it might be inferred that plaintiff had no intention of charging defendant for board. The court charged that, if there was no expectation or promise to give or receive pay, plaintiff could not recover. Held, that it was not error to charge, at defendant's request, that the law does not imply a contract between relatives, with the qualification that this was not one of that class of cases.—White v. Knowles, 52 Hun, 612, 6 N. Y. Supp. 579.

[u] (N. Y. 1891) An instruction to the jury, which charges "that whenever a man, without the invitation of another, renders services or makes an offer to render services to another, and the other stands by and accepts the efforts of the first person, and uses whatever service is bestowed, the law infers a promise upon the part of the man who has received the benefit to pay for that benefit such sum as is fair and reasonable," is inapplicable to a case in which voluntary services were rendered by the plaintiff's steam fireboats in extinguishing a fire in the defendant's warehouse, which was largely insured, and filled with goods belonging to others.—Merritt v. American Dock & Trust Co., 59 N. Y. Super. Ct. (27 Jones & S.) 83, 13 N. Y. Supp. 234.

[uu] (N. Y. 1892) In an action by a son against the executor of his mother for services rendered the latter in her lifetime, a charge that "children are bound to take care of their parents in their old age," and "the consequence" of that rule, and of the promptings of filial affection, is "that the presumption of law is against such a claim as has been advanced in this action," is reversible error, as tending to prejudice the jury, in determining the fact of such an agreement, there being evidence that deceased had requested the services, and agreed to pay therefor.—Ulrich v. Ulrich, 136 N. Y. 120, 32 N. E. 606, 1015, 18 L. R. A. 37, reversing (1892) 60 N. Y. Super. Ct. (28 Jones & S.) 237, 17 N. Y. Supp. 721.

[v] (N. Y. 1892) Nor was such error cured by a subsequent instruction that if plaintiff had overcome the presumption by proof he might recover.—Ulrich v. Ulrich, 136 N. Y. 120, 32 N. E. 606, 1015, 18 L. R. A. 37.

[vv] (N. C. 1848) Plaintiff contracted to work for defendant for six months at $8 per month. The defendant, at the expiration of four months, refused to pay the hire of those months, alleging that he was not bound to pay until the expiration of the six months, upon which plaintiff refused to work any longer. He subsequently agreed to clear three acres of land in place of the two months' additional work, but the clearing was not done according to the agreement. Held, that an instruction that the work done in clearing the land was necessarily beneficial was erroneous.—Dover v. Plemmons, 32 N. C. 23.

[w] (Ohio, 1894) Where plaintiff sues for services rendered under an implied contract, and defendant alleges a special contract, but admits the services, it is proper to charge that defendant, in order to limit a recovery by the special contract, must establish such contract by a preponderance of the evidence.—Sanns v. Neal, 52 Ohio St. 37, 38 N. E. 881.

[ww] (Or. 1896) In an action for services rendered for defendant under an alleged contract, in the sale of merchandise which defendant had taken possession of under a chattel mortgage securing a note signed by plaintiff and the mortgagor, an instruction basing plaintiff's right to recover on a conversion of the goods by defendant, and on their value, instead of on the question of the employment of plaintiff by defendant, is erroneous.—Dooley v. First Nat. Bank, 29 Or. 277, 45 Pac. 780.

[x] (Pa. 1867) In an action to recover for services, where no express promise to pay a specific sum was proved, the mere fact that defendants paid another party a certain sum for rendering similar services is not sufficient to warrant the judge in charging the jury that it was probable the defendant promised to pay the sum to plaintiff.—Bickham v. Smith, 55 Pa. (5 P. F. Smith) 335.

[xx] (Pa. 1876) In actions for claims against the estates of decedents for services by members of their family, the courts should instruct the jury with great precision and positiveness as to the evidence necessary to constitute a contract.—Neal's Ex'rs v. Gilmore, 79 Pa. (29 P. F. Smith) 421.

[y] (Pa. 1896) In an action against decedent's estate for compensation for services rendered by plaintiff while living in decedent's family from childhood to maturity, it was error to charge: "If she [plaintiff] worked faithfully and honestly, what were her services worth to this old man and woman? On your oaths and consciences, on the spirit of honor and fairness, on the spirit of right and justice, what ought she to get from this estate?"—this setting up a wrong standard by which to estimate her wages.—Kauss v. Rohner, 172 Pa. 481, 33 Atl. 1016, 51 Am. St. Rep. 762.

[yy] (Tex. 1896) In an action for medical services it appeared that plaintiff was not in the actual practice of medicine; that he was closely related to defendant's family, and the families of the parties were on the most intimate terms; that most of the time plaintiff made defendant's home a general stopping place for rest, etc.; and that it was under such circumstances that plaintiff prescribed for defendant's family. The court charged that, if plaintiff's demand was just, he was entitled to recover, and that, if it was not just and due, but was contrary to law and equity, the jury should find for defendant. Held, that it was error to refuse a special charge asked by plaintiff on the question of implied contract.—Bonner v. Bradley (Civ. App.) 36 S. W. 1014.

[z] (Wash. 1893) In an action for services rendered as a surveyor, it was alleged as a defense that the survey made by plaintiff was not correct. Plaintiff testified that defendant gave him the starting point, and told him to survey from that. Held, that the court did not err in charging that, if they believed plaintiff's testimony, he had a right to rely on defendant's representations as to the starting point, but, if they did not believe it, then they must determine whether the survey was correctly made.—Graves v. Smith, 7 Wash. 14, 34 Pac. 213.

[zz] (Wis. 1877) In an action by a son for services rendered after maturity for his father, who claimed that the son had lived in his family, receiving board and clothing as a member thereof, an instruction that if the jury found, from the preponderance of the evidence, that the father agreed to pay the son for his services, the latter was entitled to recover, is erroneous, as justifying the jury in believing that the father could be held liable on an implied contract.—Wells v. Perkins, 43 Wis. 160.

§ 64. Judgment.

Amount of recovery, see ante, §§ 56–58.

[a] (Miss. 1873) Where plaintiff in assumpsit proved that at the request of defendant, though without any special contract for the amount of the wages, he had been in defendant's employ for two years, upon demurrer to the evidence, the judgment will be quod recuperet, and a writ of inquiry to ascertain the amount will be issued.—Jordan v. Foxworth, 48 Miss. 607.

§ 65. Appeal and error.

[a] (Ind. 1857) Where the evidence in a suit for work and labor showed the rendering of services under such circumstances that the law would have implied no promise to pay for them, and the plaintiffs relied upon an express agreement to take the case out of the rule, and offered testimony tending to prove it, a verdict for the plaintiffs will not be disturbed on appeal.—Littler v. Smiley, 9 Ind. 116.

[b] (Ind. 1891) In an action on a common count for the reasonable value of labor, plaintiff testified that he had contracted with defendant to do certain ditching for eight cents per cubic yard. The court charged that if the jury found that plaintiff had worked at an "agreed price" they should be governed thereby, and also that if they found that there was no contract as to price they should be governed by what the work was reasonably worth "as proven." Held harmless error, where the evidence showed that defendant paid eight cents to others for like work, and no other sum was mentioned during the trial.—Garrigan v. Dickey, 1 Ind. App. 421, 27 N. E. 713.

[c] (Ind. 1891) Where, in an action for work and labor the rendering of the services is proved, and the evidence is conflicting as to whether the services were paid for by support and clothing furnished to the plaintiff by the defendant while a member of plaintiff's family, a verdict for the plaintiff will not be disturbed on appeal, as contrary to the evidence.—Chamness v. Cox, 2 Ind. App. 485, 28 N. E. 777.

[d] (N. Y. 1879) H., two days before his death, requested R., his confidential clerk, to bring to H.'s house a box of money and valuable papers, and thereupon to take charge thereof and put it in a safe deposit, all of which R. did, and, upon the appointment of the administratrix, eight days after H.'s death, delivered her the box. R. sued her for such services, claiming compensation as upon a quantum meruit, besides his salary of $60 per month, but on the trial set up no claim to special employment, and was nonsuited. Held, on appeal, that, even if such employment were valid, plaintiff was entitled only to compensation for the eight days at $60 per month, and, as he made no such claim, the maxim "de minimis non curat lex," applies, and the judgment will be affirmed.—Ross v. Hardin, 79 N. Y. 84.

[e] (N. Y. 1896) In an action to recover on a quantum meruit for services rendered, it appeared that defendant, on account of sickness, was in need of some one to conduct his business, and that plaintiff, under a request from defendant's brother-in-law, assumed charge of the business during defendant's sickness, defendant executing to him powers of attorney to sign, accept and indorse all checks, notes, and drafts. Held, that the fact that the referee erred in determining that plaintiff did not render any material services before delivery of the powers of attorney was not prejudicial to defendant.—Wiley v. Goodsell, 3 App. Div. 452, 38 N. Y. Supp. 376.

[f] (N. Y. 1896) Where the amount allowed by the referee for the services was not excessive in any view of the case, error in regard to the amount of profits earned for defendant in the business was not prejudicial to defendant.—Wiley v. Goodsell, 3 App. Div. 452, 38 N. Y. Supp. 376.

[g] (Ohio, 1854) Upon two counts of a declaration for work and labor—the first averring the liability, the intervention of the statute of limitations, and a subsequent promise to pay within six years before the commencement of the action; the second, averring a promise to pay in consideration of work previously done by the plaintiff, but without averring a request by the defendant's testator—the court charged that a recovery might be had on the second count, not for the labor, but upon the promise made in consideration of such labor. Held, on appeal, that the charge was no ground for reversal; the jury having in effect found a request under the first count, and it not appearing that the jury could have supposed the court intended to charge that no original request was necessary.—Haymaker's Ex'rs v. Haymaker, 4 Ohio St. 272.
